THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

The Forward Movement Not Yet Commenced.

Account of Jackson to Re-inforce Lee.

The Rebel Lines Extended Several Miles Down the Rappahannock.

THE WEATHER INTENSELY COLD.

Hard Roads for the Movement of Heavy Artillery.

HEADQUARTERS, ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Sunday, Dec. 7, 1862.

There has been no field movements to-day.

Citizens well informed, state that Jackson has ordered Stonewall Brigade, Ewell and Jones to join their forces with those already there. They also report that the enemy have extended their lines several miles further down the Rappahannock.

Last night was intensely cold, and some of the soldiers suffered for want of blankets. Ice formed in Potomac and Aquia Creeks from one and a half to two inches thick. To-day the sun came out fair and cheering, but the air continued piercing cold. The roads are hard, and very rough.

The report that Maj. SEARING, of the Engineer Brigade, is under arrest for unnecessary delay in the transportation of pontoon trains from Washington, is unfounded. That officer has been commended by his superiors for overcoming weighty obstacles in executing his orders.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Dec. 7.

SECRETARY CHASE'S FINANCIAL POLICY.

The report of Secretary CHASE is receiving commendation from unexpected quarters, and is universally conceded to display an uncommon optimism in dealing with the difficult problems of finance which have puzzled the country. Strong opposition to some of his recommendations is being developed on the part of the friends of the banks, who seem to regard them as adverse to the interests of those institutions, but the general impression of opinion indicates that his policy will be sustained by Congress. Little confidence can be placed in statements regarding the opinions of individual members of the Committee of Ways and Means, as those opinions are not expressed with a view to publication, and are liable to modification. The Committee has as yet given the report no consideration, and of course can have reached no conclusion to regard to its recommendations.

GENERALS.

It is expected that Congress will immediately pass the bill, introduced by the Senate Military Committee on Friday, repealing the law of last session which limits the number of general officers in the volunteer service, and the President is only awaiting this action to send in a list of Major-Generals already prepared. As those names are understood to have mostly been selected by Gen. HALLECK from the lists of the regular army, they will be closely scrutinized in the Senate, and many of the nominations probably rejected.

THE STOLEN CERTIFICATES.

The United States Treasurer is preparing an official description of the contraband certificates of indebtedness, to the amount of two and a half millions of dollars, which were stolen from his desk some days since, and this description will be published as a warning to the public against any attempt at their use.

THE MINISTER TO NICARAGUA.

Thomas H. CLAY, recently appointed Minister to Nicaragua, is here to receive his instructions, which are nearly ready, and he will probably leave to-morrow for New-York to take the steamer of Wednesday for his destination.

RELEASED.

Messrs. CORNELIUS & TRACY, brokers of New-York, who were some time ago incarcerated in the old Capitol Prison for purchasing fraudulent certificates of Government indebtedness, were to-day released from confinement.

PRINTING THE GOVERNMENT NOTES.

A resolution will be introduced to-morrow in the House, instructing the Committee on Public expenditures to investigate the contract for printing the Treasury notes and postal currency, and the probable economy of having the work done in the Treasury Building—it being alleged that at least sixty per cent can be saved by the change.

AXES FOR THE ARMY.

Gen. DOUBLEDAY arrived here last night, for the purpose, among other things, of endeavoring to procure a supply of axes for the army, the soldiers being greatly in want of them, and no serviceable tool for use.

OFF THE STATE.

Col. GRAHAM, of the Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, is said by his friends to be on the state for nomination as a Brigadier-General.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT.

Vice-President HAMLIN is expected to return here this week.

SICK SOLDIERS.

A number of sick soldiers arrived to-day from the Army of the Potomac, and were distributed amongst the various hospitals here.

GEN. M'CLELLAN.

Gen. McCLELLAN has telegraphed that he will arrive in the first train to-morrow.

TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Dec. 7.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

The following regulation has been made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, relating to the agents of manufacturers. The word "agent," as used in the seventy-fourth and seventy-fifth sections of the Excise act, is construed to mean either a person who is the exclusive agent of a manufacturer or any person or firm selling goods on commission designated by a manufacturer as his agent for the sale of his manufactures. In all cases the manufacturer will be required to make known to the Assessor or Assistant Assessor of the district, the name and place of business of the agent so designated.

MR. STEVENS' RESOLUTION.

The resolution of Representative STEVENS, pronouncing as guilty of a high crime any person in the Executive or Legislative branch of the Government who shall propose to make peace, or shall accept or advise the acceptance of any such proposition, on any other basis than the integrity and entire unity of the United States and the Territories, as they existed at the time of the rebellion, the consideration of which has been postponed till Tuesday week, will probably be fully discussed, as several members are already preparing to speak upon the subject. This resolution is not supposed to be aimed at the Administration, as its position is known to be that no peace is admissible at the cost of a single acre of the Union.

MR. VALLANDIGHAM'S RESOLUTION.

The resolution of Mr. VALLANDIGHAM, proposing a Convention of the States, and which is pending from the last session, will soon come up for consideration in the House.

NAVAL ORDERS.

Capt. JOHN A. WINSLOW has been ordered to the command of the screw-sloop Kearsarge, vice Capt. PORTERFIELD, detached and ordered home.

Lieut.-Commander THORNTON has been ordered to the Kearsarge, vice Lieut.-Commander THOMAS O. HARRIS, ordered home.

Lieut. JOHN C. WENDAR has been ordered to the TUSCARORA, vice Lieut.-Commander M. PATTERSON JONES, ordered home.

The above will take passage out on the Vanderbilt.

THE WAR IN THE SOUTHWEST.

Another Victory of Gen. BLUNT—Fears for the First Division—Marmaduke—Of Military Movements—Corps d'Afrique—Fight in the Indian Country—Troops from Colorado.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

LEAVENWORTH, KAN., Sunday, Nov. 30, 1862.

Before this reaches you the telegraph will have conveyed intelligence of the complete defeat and rout of the rebel forces under Gen. MARMADUKE in Western Arkansas, by our Kansas Brig.-Gen. J. G. BLUNT. The fight occurred on the 28th, after near Cane Hill, a few miles north of Fayetteville, and about thirty south of Bentonville. Gen. BLUNT, with about 7,000 men, attacked the Confederates, 10,000 strong; fought, routed and whipped them for ten miles, and was only prevented continuing the pursuit by the night. The victory of the Kansas Division of the army of the frontier is complete and overwhelming. It will be remembered that owing to some means, the reason for which unmilitary readers fail to perceive, the Second and Third Divisions of the Army of the Frontier, under Gens. SCHOFIELD, TOWNSEND and BLUNT, have returned to Springfield, Mo., and gone into Winter quarters. The First Division, however, pushed southward. Its thoroughly in earnest, indomitable and daring chief, Gen. BLUNT, has not his mind upon restoring to the Union the Indian Territory and Western Arkansas, and if not peremptorily ordered back, he will do it and more. Since this army took the field, the Kansas Division has fought and won three battles, besides an uncounted number of skirmishes. Newtonia, Old Fort Wayne, and new Cane Hill, are the victorious words which the banners of the Kansas, Wisconsin, Ohio and Indiana troops in its ranks will proudly bear.

Our last accounts from Gen. BLUNT (those previous to the announcement of this victory) had filled every one with anxiety for the result of the contest then evidently pending. It was known that the entire force of the First Division would not number, all told, more than about 6,500, though these were all effective and well armed. The enemy were reported to be from 15,000 to 25,000, under Gens. HELMS, McBRIDE and MARMADUKE. It was believed that they were concentrating for an attack on Gen. BLUNT. The latter was 150 miles from Fort Scott, whence his supplies are forwarded. All of the Western Missouri guerrillas have concentrated between that post and the rest of his lines, and are constantly harrassing the trains and interrupting communication. Coupled with these facts was the knowledge that Gen. BLUNT had sent an expedition into the Cherokee Nation under Col. PHILLIPS, and that a large portion of the Wisconsin Third Cavalry were returning to Fort Scott, to do garrison duty at that post, and that a battalion, the Second Ohio Cavalry, were also on their march to St. Louis, for the purpose of returning to Columbus, Ohio, previous to a campaign in Tennessee. All these things made us anxious for Gen. BLUNT. The utmost confidence was felt in the commanding general, who, though not a man possessed of a military education, is yet gifted with great natural ability as a soldier; brave even to rashness; with unswerving fidelity to ideas and purposes, large perceptives, quick sagacity, prompt to decide, and with a physique which knows no fatigue, and can bear any privation or exposure. These qualities, as exhibited in Gen. JAMES G. BLUNT, have shown him to be "the right man in the right place." He is ably supported. Gen. SALOMON, of Wisconsin, is a German soldier of no mean reputation; Acting Brig.-Gen. CLOUD, of the Kansas Second, has won a proud reputation as a dashing, brilliant soldier, from Wilson's Creek to Cane Hill. Col. WM. A. PHILLIPS, commanding the Third Indiana Regiment, is among the ablest, most sagacious public men of our State. Then the troops are the veterans of many a bloodily contested field.

Lieut.-Col. JEWELL, of the Sixth Kansas Cavalry, reported as mortally wounded, is a Kentuckian by birth, and one of the most efficient officers in the district. He was an estimable citizen, as well as a worthy soldier, and will be regretted by all who knew him. Lieut. JOHNSON, of the same regiment, mortally wounded, is a son of Col. FRIEDRICH JOHNSON, agent for the Delaware Indians, who latterly, under authority of Gen. LANE, raised the Twelfth Regiment Kansas Volunteers.

The general military news in this district is not of great interest. A detachment of the heroes of New Mexico, the First Colorado, under Major WINSOR, is now on its way to Fort Scott, from the Rocky Mountains. The Third Colorado Regiment, raised by WILLIAM GILPIN, Jr., under authority from Gen. LANE, has already commenced its march to Fort Leavenworth. These troops will well replace the Second Ohio and Third Wisconsin Cavalry, withdrawn from BLUNT's Division, and be very acceptable, as the First, especially, is largely composed of Kansas men, and has been tried by the most daring episode of the war for the Union—the Texan raid into New-Mexico. The Twelfth Kansas is still doing duty on the border. The First Kansas Regiment Corps d' Afrique, is now at Camp John A. Andrew, engaged in preparing its pay and muster rolls, for the purpose of receiving its mockeum of "green-backs," and being duly mustered into the United States service, as per orders of Gen. CURTIS. It will immediately march south, to Gen. BLUNT, having already received orders to that effect. The experiment has been a hard-fought one, and its ultimate success is well known. I shall be with the regiment in its movements, and will report progress.

Col. H. B. BANCROFT, of St. Joseph, Mo., Indian Superintendent for the Western tribes, has lately been paying the Kansas Indian tribes. He has disbursed $60,000 to the Sacs and Foxes, Shawnees, Pottawatomies, and Kaws. I believe this is the first time that Indian payments have been made directly by the Superintendent. It is usually the custom to send the money to the various Agents, but the Minnesota troubles and the well-grounded complaints of the Indians against a majority of their Agents, of complicity with the traders to swindle, which attempts have already caused such dire results, induced President LINCOLN to order that the present payments should be made by the Superintendent in person. OUR IRON-CLAD NAVY.

COMPLETION OF ALL THE NINE MONITORS.

Launch of the Keokuk, Catskill and Nantucket on Saturday—Trial of the Weehawken's Speed—The Lehigh Reported Ready.

Saturday last will prove an eventful day in the history of our iron-clad navy. The Whitney battery, Keokuk, and the Ericsson batteries Catskill and Nantucket (not Maul as reported) were launched—the first two here and the latter at Boston; the Lehigh was reported "ready for launching preparations," and the speed of the Weehawken, another Ericsson battery, was tried in Jersey City, her engines and machinery having been previously reported in working order.

THE KEOKUK—SOME PECULIARITIES PUBLISHED FOR THE FIRST TIME.

This vessel was towed off the stocks, but when set in motion launched well, and was exceedingly buoyant. Admiral GREGORY, Captain HOPKINS, of the Golana, Captain RYAN, of the Keokuk, D. DUDLEY FIELD, EDW. MANN, ALBERT SWAIN, Mr. HALL and others were present. The dimensions and a detailed account of the work performed on the Keokuk have been printed, but they convey no idea to the general reader of her peculiarities. They are:

First—The armor of the hull and its arrangements.

Second—The mode of mounting her turret.

Third—The speed of the ship.

I. The bulwark, or outside armor with which the construction of Monitors has made Americans familiar, consists of iron plates laid over one another. Thus, when we say a battery has four and a half inches of iron armor on her sides, we mean that 4-inch plates and half-inch plates are laid over each other and fastened. Mr. WHITNEY has adopted a new and novel plan, which is interesting and apparently good. Over a ground-work of half-inch rolled plates there are bars of iron four inches thick, alternately with strips of yellow pine, of about equal thickness; over all these, then, there are two or three ¾-inch plates of iron; so that, in reality, the exclusively iron mail on the outside, is not quite two inches thick, while the whole armor, the iron edge, wooden lining and plates together, make over six. Many think this as good as six inches of plate iron.

2. The turret is somewhat similarly made. The small batteries already in service, except the Galena, have in their turrets, eleven 1-inch iron plates, all laid over each other, and constitutes an exclusively iron wall eleven inches in thickness. The Keokuk's turrets have the 4-inch iron bars, inside or outside the ¾ plates, and although "the turret has 5½ inches of iron," as stated in our first account of the vessel, only two inches or less of it is laid on in plates, the rest being edge-turned bars, which, as in the hull, frequently alternate with strips of pine, so that the exclusively iron armor of the turret is only two inches, while the mass taken together is deemed by many as strong as if all the plates were laid over each other.

The Keokuk was to be a "ten knot vessel" when she was originally designed, but more iron having been put on her than was intended, it is conceded that she will lose a knot thereby, or only make nine. The first indispensable attribute of a ram is strength, the second speed. Hence the most important—the last named—peculiarity of this singular ship has been overlooked by all who have written about her. She will be fast, and her strength is apparent to all who look at her. A steam ram must be able to catch the vessel she wishes to destroy, and to strike her with as much velocity as possible. It is to make the Keokuk this kind of craft that Mr. WHITNEY has so assiduously labored. Were it possible to drive her twenty miles an hour she would be all the better ram for it, but she is not meant so much to be the perfect thing herself as to illustrate in what manner perfection can be attained. Her engines are five hundred horse power and if they drive her nine miles an hour, as the authorities expect, it would be easy to build one four times her size, with proportionate speed.

It is, therefore, as a ram, well guarded, more than an impregnable iron clad, that the Keokuk challenges criticism. The other new features of the vessel, such as her two propellers, and the partially submersive character she possesses, have been mentioned at length in the papers.

HER COMMANDER.

The navy was on the qui vive to know who would have command of the Keokuk. Being the first iron-clad ever built in the City of New-York, it was only deemed right that her "Skipper" should be a New-Yorker. Hence, ALEXANDER C. RHIND, one of the regular officers of the old navy, got the appointment. He is one of the finest officers in the service, and has shown on board the Seneca, one of the twenty-three new wooden gunboats which he recently commanded, that he knows how to handle a ship. Singularly enough, his brother, appointment and citizenship are accredited to different States. He was born in New-York, as already intimated, was appointed from Alabama, and is a citizen of Minnesota. He has been twenty years in the navy, of which eleven were spent at sea. When the Constellation corvette was Commodore INMAN's flagship on the coast of Africa, he was a Lieutenant on board.

LAUNCH OF THE CATSKILL.

The Ericsson battery Catskill was successfully floated off, at Greenpoint, about 10 o'clock on Saturday. If there is any slight difference between the nine Monitor batteries, there is none between those constructed at the same yard. The Passaic and Montauk, which were described at length in these columns, were built side by side with the Catskill, at the Continental Works, the "nursery" of the original Monitor. The Catskill is 200 feet long, 45 feet wide, 12 feet deep, and will draw 9 feet 6 inches of water when in fighting trim. The only matters concerning her which are now may be then disposed of: It is seriously, but we believe, not definitely fixed, that she shall have two 15-inch guns. The servomotors with which one has been put on board has been eradicated, and no one talks of resigning now because two will be placed in the turrets. Inside the turret, the new ram apparatus, which proved so successful on the Passaic, is being already fitted. The two 15-inch guns can be conveniently worked by three men, who, however, can spend some "money's worth" of iron in discharging their duty and the guns. Each of the guns can throw a 450-pounder, which is driven off by 25 pounds of powder. At 3 cents a pound, one discharge of the battery—900 pounds of shot—would cost $27; and the powder, at 10 cents a pound, $45, or $72 in all. Firing 300 times an hour with both guns, would therefore incur an outlay of $1,440, and for eight hours' fighting, $11,520.

LAUNCH OF THE NANTUCKET.

The Nantucket, another Ericsson iron-clad, was launched at Boston on Saturday. Her name is inadvertently reported "Maul" in the telegraphic dispatch. She has been constructed at the East Boston Atlantic Works. The Natick, two hundred miles at Boston a few months since, and is now nearly ready for sea. These two vessels are on like the other Monitors that Mr. Ericsson himself could not tell them apart. The length, width and tonnage are almost identical, the same as are all other portions. The Nantucket, for instance, is 172 feet from stem to stern, while the Catskill is 200. Indeed, the figures are alike, but 100 is generally called 200.

THE LEHIGH REPORTED READY.

On the same day on which the above ships were launched, we received news that the Lehigh was "reported"—that is, she is notified as being preparing to launch. She is on the stocks at Greenpoint, from which the Dongerous was recently launched.

The Messrs. NAPIER have contracted for her, and have already succeeded in putting about one-half of her iron plates on. The Lehigh, in an unfinished condition, is like the craft just described. She is built on precisely the same principle, and the machinery and boilers are now in the process of being put in. Her engines are spoken of as very fine.

TRIAL OF THE WEEHAWKEN'S SPEED.

While New-York and Brooklyn were enjoying the ceremonies attending the launch of the Keokuk and Catskill, Jersey City was awakened by the roar of steam from the Weehawken, which was launched at Hoboken some weeks since. The guns having arrived for the turret, the greater part of the iron work being finished and the machinery completed, steam was applied to the engines which began to work elegantly. Mr. BERGMANN, the Superintendent, witnessed their satisfactory motions, and was highly pleased. The engines easily made fifty revolutions a minute, without an attempt to test their maximum capacity.

HOW SATURDAY'S WORK LEAVES THE NINE MONITORS.

A great change has been effected in the condition of the nine Ericsson batteries by the proceedings of Saturday. They are all afloat now save one, (the Lehigh,) and she is reported almost ready to launch. Annexed is the exact state of affairs with these vessels to-day:

Vessel.	Condition.	Where.
1. Passaic	On duty	Fortress Monroe.
2. Montauk	Ready for sea	New-York.
3. Weehawken	Nearly ready	Jersey City.
4. Sangamon	Nearly ready	Chester, Penn.
5. Nahant	Nearly ready	Boston.
6. Patapsco	Nearly ready	Wilmington, Del.
7. Nantucket	Just launched	Boston.
8. Catskill	Just launched	Greenpoint.
9. Lehigh	Ready to launch	Chester, Penn.

NEWS FROM FORTRESS MONROE.

A Member of Congress to be Elected from the District of Virginia.

FORTRESS MONROE, Friday, Dec. 5.

To-morrow Gen. VIELE, as Military Governor, will issue a proclamation and a writ of election for a member of Congress from the Norfolk District, comprising the Counties of Norfolk, Princess Anne, Nansemond and Isle of Wight, with the Cities of Norfolk and Portsmouth. A large vote will be polled, as the residents are anxious to save their slave property from the effects of the President's proclamation, by conforming to its requirements.

It is known that Hon. JOHN S. SLEAR has succeeded in having his District, the counties of Northampton, Accomac, Charles City, Elizabeth City and Warwick, exempted by the President from the effect of his late proclamation.

A heavy storm has been raging here all day.

Convalescents in General Hospitals.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

A communication, signed by a member of the Thirty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, an inmate of this hospital, appeared recently in your paper, sanctioned, apparently, by Col. HOWE, "Superintendent of the New-England Soldiers' Relief Association." The statements of this soldier, thus indorsed, were thought of sufficient importance to be copied into one or more Boston papers. It will be seen by the subjoined letter, received to-day from Col. HOWE, that he disclaims having authorized the publication of that communication:

NEW-ENGLAND SOLDIERS' RELIEF ASSOCIATION, No. 194 Broadway, N. Y., Nov. 28, 1862.

Dr. Bartholow, Surgeon in Charge Hospital, Fort Schuyler:

DEAR SIR: My attention was called the other day to a letter in one of the papers from a soldier in your hospital. I wish to say to you that I never saw the letter until it was shown to me in the paper. Nor do I or any of my assistants know how or by whom it was inserted. I do not like such things, and none such, with my consent, will ever reach publicity.

Yours, very respectfully,

(Signed,) FRANK E. HOWE, Supt. N. E. S. R. A.

The communication referred to, consisted of an inquiry as to the propriety of "sick and wounded" soldiers being required to dig cellars, whitewash buildings, &c., as is the custom at Fort Schuyler. If this inquiry were merely personal to myself, I should not consider it worth my while to answer it; but as a great multitude of anxious friends and relatives are interested in the treatment of sick and wounded soldiers, it seems to me fitting that I should show how much of truth is contained in it.

That really sick and wounded soldiers are compelled to labor, is too absurd to require a denial; that men, nominally sick and fit to return to their regiments, are required to perform certain fatigue and police duties, is quite true. The newly erected wards need whitewashing, certain cellars are to be dug out, and a great deal of other fatigue duty, incident to building, is to be done. The question is: Shall the convalescents—a large majority of whom have lived by the most laborious occupations—be required to do this work, or shall the United States be subjected to the expense of hiring the necessary laborers?

Few soldiers, no matter what their stations in private life, object to being employed in this useful way, recognizing, indeed, the prodigious demands made by the war on the resources of the country and the duty of every man in the public service, to fighting as far as in him lies, the load. It is the malingerer, the skulker, who exclaims against the employment of soldiers in these offices, and who can, complacently, absorb the pay and rations of the Government, without caring to render an equivalent.

This is the utilitarian aspect of the question; there is another, more important—the sanitarian. Exercise is necessary to the health of convalescents—to fit them for the much greater fatigue and exposure of the field service. Idleness is the fruitful source of evil habits, disorders and military offences of various grades, in hospitals as in garrisons and camps. Impairment of physical health is not a remote consequence of evil habits. Justice to the United States and to the soldier alike demand that the hospital should not be a place of refuge for the malingerer and the idle man, and that the convalescents should be compelled to perform such duties as the interests of the service and the state of their own health require.

ROBERTS BARTHOLOW, Assistant Surgeon, U. S. Army, In charge of General Hospital.

FORT SCHUYLER, N. Y., Dec. 1, 1862.

A Trap for the Alabama.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The American Mercantile Marine at the present moment is suffering from the ravages of the Alabama. All attempts on the part of the Government hitherto to destroy this "sea-serpent" have proved futile. The Vanderbilt and many other vessels have been unsuccessfully fitted out for the purpose of capturing her, but with a man like SEMMES, to declare open war before you are within gunshot, is preposterous. Possibly having any merline spikes concerned, under ordinary circumstances, will be given a wide berth by so wary a bird as the commander of the Alabama. Having had considerable experience on whaling cruises myself, I send you these few rough remarks, and should you feel inclined to insert them in your widely circulated journal, do so. Yours, respectfully,

TRUMAN, December 6, 1862. MASSOHUSE.

THE McDOWELL COURT OF INQUIRY.

Operations on the Line of the Richmond and Fredericksburg Railroad.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Dec. 5, 1862.

The Court met at 11 o'clock. Col. RAGGLES was the first witness sworn. His testimony related chiefly to the character and position of the witness examined the day before—Col. R. D. Goodwin. He charged him with imbecility and obstinacy; but this portion of the testimony was ruled out by the Court.

Gen. McDowell then presented the following protest:

"I am and have been loth to consume the time and tax the patience of the court in the matter of the character of R. D. Goodwin. I have thought in this case, which the court has already ruled was an exceptional one, I could show what I am assured and believe is the fact, that the witness has attempted to pass forged papers on the Government, and has been an inmate of one of the New-York penitentiaries. I am not acquainted with the practice of civil courts, and have felt in this case such note must be sufficient to discredit the witness among military men.

(Signed) IRWIN McDOWELL.

Dec. 5, 1862."

Major-Gen. SIGEL Steinwehr was next sworn. He testified in regard to the letter of Col. Goodwin, denying its statements.

Major Brown also testified in regard to the return of captured property.

The Court then adjourned until 11 o'clock on Saturday.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6, 1862.

In the McDowell Court of Inquiry to-day Brigadier General S. Hazzard said, after being sworn, that the article in the New-York Times, stating that it took a longer time for McDowell to complete the repairs on the Aquia and Fredericksburg Railroad than Gen. Burnside has used, was doing great injustice to the former. Gen. McDowell had completed it in less than a month, though the difficulties were greater then than now. The rails were laid by the light of lanterns in the pitchy nights, when the roads were filled with mud. Gen. McDowell directed the work personally, and his energy was surprising. The negro fugitives were put to work whenever they came within our lines. Much trouble was experienced in getting them, as large numbers came to Washington, as they said, to see "Massa Lincoln." The negroes were paid the amount of pay prescribed in the order. Those who would not work were speedily discharged. The property of the inhabitants was seized, when needed for Government purposes, in a legal way. No authorized seizures were made. Gen. McDowell remarked on several occasions that he was to be "the only plundered man in the Army of the Rappahannock." Gen. McDowell had made these seizures. Gen. McDowell was active to all the details of the work to facilitate the transportation of his army toward Richmond. He sometimes anticipated me in my endeavors to push forward the roads and bridges. He was extremely anxious to cooperate with Gen. McClellan in his movement against Richmond. He was very anxious about the bridge over the Mattapomoxy, south of Fredericksburg, at the time it was in possession of the enemy. This bridge was reconstructed by him, and would have given us twenty-five miles of continuous railroad communication toward Richmond. He hurried me in my work, and when I replied I was nearly ready, made the arrangement to march on Monday, leaving me to succeed the communication, and forward supplies till such time as he could rely on his wagons alone. The President was there. Gen. McDowell used this expression, "I will not be quite ready to move on Saturday, as Shields is badly off for supplies, which will be ready on that day. Sunday morning I will be ready." The President said, "Well, be sure and take a good ready." Gen. H. testified to the injurious effect of the murder of Robert T. Scott by our stragglers to the Union cause, and substantiated the fact of these robbers committing rape in one instance, eloping from Gen. McDowell his escort on that occasion, he gave it as his opinion that Gen. McDowell had made loyalty the subject of discrimination by issuing certificates payable after the war, on proof being presented of the fact; instances were cited of Gen. McDowell's exposure to the elements on various occasions while he superintended the speedy transit of supplies; the only complaints he had heard of McDowell's troops were from some of the members of his staff, who complained that the General worked them to death.

Maj. Tilesom testified, among other things, that he had never seen any indisposition in Gen. McDowell's character as a military man, and corroborated, in other respects, the testimony of Gen. Hazzard.

A letter from Col. Goodwin, asking that he be allowed to rebut the charges made in the paper of Gen. McDowell, yesterday, that he had been in the State Prison twice, was refused, as irrelevant to the inquiry.

The Court then adjourned.

GEN. MCDOWELL CHALLENGED.—Col. R. D. Goodwin, who seems to lead the prosecution in the case of Gen. McDOWELL, has sent a formal challenge to that officer in consequence of the statement which Gen. McDOWELL presented to the Court yesterday morning, reflecting upon the character of that gentleman. We may add, the General seems to pay little or no regard to the matter, so we think nothing serious need be feared.—Washington Star, Saturday.

Burning of an Orphan's Farm School.

ROCHESTER, Penn., Sunday, Dec. 7.

The Orphans' Farm School at Zelienople, Butler County, Penn., was burnt on Saturday morning. The children were mercifully saved. The buildings, costing $25,000, with the furniture, provisions, clothing, &c., were totally consumed.

The Old Point Boat.

BALTIMORE, Sunday, Dec. 7

The Old Point boat arrived this afternoon. She did not leave till Saturday afternoon on account of a high gale, which has prevailed all day. Disasters are feared.

No news was received.

Personal.

Gen. McClellan and Staff left the Fifth-avenue Hotel last evening, at 5 o'clock, and proceeded in a very quiet manner to the depot of the New-Jersey Central Railroad, where they embarked in the 6 o'clock P. M. train for Washington City, via Philadelphia. Gen. McClellan proceeds to Washington in compliance with a subpoena which he has received to attend (as a witness) the trials by Court-martial now in progress at that city. Mrs. McClellan still remains at the Hotel, where she is expected to stay until the return of her husband.

Ex-Gov. HUNT, of Lockport; Hons. R. H. Gladstone, M. D., and E. Muse, of Brooklyn, and James Graham, of Delhi, are sleeping at the Albemarle Hotel.

Ex-Governor Weller, of California, San Francisco, and N. J. Burton, Madison, are sleeping at the New-York Hotel.

OUR FOREIGN RELATIONS.

The Correspondence Between the State Department and Mr. C. F. Adams, Our Representative at London.

Important Dispatches Not Yet Known with the Replies of Secretary SEWARD.

Interviews of Mr. Adams with the Ministers of Foreign Powers.

The correspondence between the State Department and the American Representative abroad has reached us in advance of its publication to Congress. The publication is of the highest importance. It tells in the most authentic form the story of our intercourse with foreign nations during the most difficult stage of the National crisis, and faithfully and ably the justice and generosity of our cause have been presented to the Governments of Europe, and why the various difficulties which easily resulted in a contest more serious have been prevented from becoming the prelude to war of an external war by the diplomatic skill of Secretary SEWARD have been so heavy as to have been successful, and have prolonged the discussion of a large number of questions, the chief of which is certainly the Emperor of France's recognition of the Southern Confederacy. The efforts of the Secretary of State have been mainly directed to the neutralization, as far as possible, the effort of European governments to grant any measure looking to the recognition of their independence, or lending direct and material aid to the cause of rebellion. To communicate constantly to our foreign agents the feeling of the war, glossed with such comments as might go to satisfy the Governments to which they were accredited that those events were rapidly conducting the struggle to a close, has been a material portion of the Secretary's task, and one into which he has thrown all his skill as a diplomatist, and all the confidence of a sanguine temperament. We propose in the present to confine our extracts to the correspondence with Mr. CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, our Minister to England.

MR. SEWARD ON THE REPORT MISSIONS.

Mr. Seward to Mr. Adams.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, WASHINGTON, Sept. 23, 1862.

To the Diplomatic and Consular officers of the United States in foreign countries:

GENTLEMEN: You will receive by the post which conveys this dispatch evidence that the aggressive movements of the insurgents against the loyal States is arrested, and that the renewed and reinvigorated forces of the Union are now prepared for a new and comprehensive campaign. If you consult the public journals you will easily learn that the financial strength of the insurrection is rapidly declining, and that the public will bring soldiers into the field more numerous than ever to its utmost. You will perceive, on the other hand, that the fiscal condition of the country is sound, and that the response to the calls for new levies is being made promptly, without drawing seriously upon the physical strength of the people.

I have instructions indicated to our representatives abroad the expediency of a change in the organization of society in the insurrectionary States. That change continues to proceed with steadiness every day. In the judgment of the President the time has come for setting forth the grounds that distinctly for the serious consideration of the people in those States, and for advising them to understand that if they will persist in forcing upon the country a choice between the dissolution of this necessary confederation and the abolition of slavery, or a rallying to the support of the government, or a rallying against it, the alternative must be maintained and preserved. With this makes the United States notes of lawful tender under this act, simply receivable for all loans to the Government, but not convertible at the will of the holder, at par, as stamped on the first issue under the act of Feb. 25. The Secretary in this clothed with the power of creating the entire $500,000,000 of United States Notes, of whatever tenor, by canceling the first issue of notes which bear upon their back the compulsory obligation to convert, at par, at the pleasure of the holder, into the 5.20 year 6 ₩ cent. Bonds of the Government—even though they should be selling at a premium in the market—and to substitute an equal amount of the notes of July 11, receivable in payment of loans at whatever rate he may sell them in the market, at or below par before the resumption of Specie Payments, but subsequently receivable in such payments at whatever premium the Bonds may bear in the market, the provision of the act of July 11 being expressed "that any notes issued under this act may be paid on Coin, instead of being received in exchange," as above.

MONETARY AFFAIRS.

It is difficult, therefore, to understand the emphasis which the Secretary now places upon the necessity for further legislation by Congress, in the following passage from his Report, except upon the inference that he desires to transfer to that body the whole responsibility of selling, and if need be, substituting the Public Stocks, in the open market, for whatever they will bring, by a mandatory act on the subject. Such an act the Administration majority in the present Congress may not be willing to pass, and the Opposition minority will certainly not help do it, except by way of embarrassing the public credit in the further prosecution of the War. It is barely possible that Mr. CHASE may not have studied thoroughly his present discretionary, not to say wholly plenary authority on the subject. But at the same time, it is not improbable that, knowing the disposition of the Republican members of the Committees of Ways and Means in the House, and of Finance in the Senate, and the preference of some of the most influential of their number for a further issue of at least $200,000,000 in United States Notes for circulation, to supply to its full capacity, a national currency, which, by indirection, his own Report admits to be inadequate to the object of conversion at par, he is willing to have the new legislation of Congress first take this course:

Other legislation is therefore needed. The act of last session authorized the Secretary to issue bonds of the United States, already often mentioned as five-twenties, to the amount of five hundred millions of dollars, and its disposal of them for coin or United States notes at the market value thereof. The same act authority was given to issue $150,000,000 in United States notes, which authority was afterward enlarged to $250,000,000; and it was provided that any holder of such notes to the amount of fifty dollars, or any multiple of fifty, might exchange them for five-twenty bonds at par. The effect of these provisions was to make negotiations of considerable amounts impossible; for considerable amounts are seldom taken, except with a view to resales at a profit, and resales at any profit are impossible under the law. Negotiations below market value are not allowed, and if not allowed, the taker of the bonds can expect no advance, unless a market value considerably below par shall become established. The act makes advance above par impossible, by authorizing conversion of United States Notes into bonds at that rate. The Secretary respectfully recommends the repeal of both these provisions. Congress did not intend, and the second has been followed by the inconvenience which were feared, namely, that the notes, which were expected to circulate by exchange, at will is of little or no advantage to the holders of the notes, for the clauses which secure their receivability for all loans made them practically convertible. Whenever the volume of notes reaches a point at which loans can be effected at rates fair to the country and desirable to takers, loans will, of course, be made, and ample opportunities for conversion offered. Should Congress, however, be of opinion that these clauses should be retained, it will be necessary to provide for other loans, at rates more favorable to the holders than convertibility into five-twenties. This can be done either by authorizing bonds at longer time, or by increasing the rates of interest offered. The Secretary cannot recommend either course except as an alternative to no provision at all. As such an alternative he would prefer the issue of 7.30 three years' bonds, convertible into five-twenty sixes at or before maturity, and of smaller notes, bearing an interest of 3.65 per cent, as proposed in his first report.

The last alternative was declined last Winter, and it is, perhaps, due to the circumstances under which the popular Loan in 7.30 ₩ cents was subscribed by the great body of the patriotic people, and to the recent favorable terms for the Government made by the bidders for what was represented to be the last of this description of paper which the Government would have to offer, that so high a rate as 7.30 ₩ cent. should not be hastily or unnecessarily paid on a three-year Loan. As the present issue, however, is convertible into a long 6 ₩ cent Stock absolute, and the Secretary suggests an alternation in any subsequent issue to a 5.20 year Stock, we do not desire to be understood as intimating a breach of public faith; especially as the Secretary leaves no doubt of his repugnance to any further issue of long-date 6 ₩ cent. Stock. Our belief is that the Committee of Ways and Means will mature, and that Congress will pass a Loan Bill embracing a National Currency feature, similar to the Loan Acts of February 25 and July 11, and that whatever is done, at the present session, with the Banking project of the Secretary, no reliance will be placed upon its practical operation for supplying the immediate and pressing needs of the Treasury, which to the 30th of June next amount to $270,000,000 beyond the present authority of United States Notes and Certificates of Indebtedness and Deposit.

The Foreign Trade of the past week was very large again for the season in the Export of Domestic Produce, and the export demand for Specie was also to the extent of nearly a million and a half of dollars, which, in the absence of the California packet of Nov. 11, not announced until late on Saturday afternoon, had the effect of keeping up the price of Gold Coin, although violent fluctuations, both ways, occurred on the Stock Exchange, from political causes, which may have had more to do with the quotation than the trade demand. The same fluctuations occurred in United States notes of the Custom-house issue, and in Treasury Bonds and Railway Shares. The price of Gold left off 131½, after having been down to 128½, and up to 133½, and then down again on Saturday morning to 130½, at which figure the speculative sales were very large on the first interpretation of the Treasury Report. The Import entries of the week are [illegible] report until about New Year, when the entries for the Spring trade will begin to be seen in large weekly totals. The money market is easier at 5 ₩ cent., and the supply is called dear by most of the Brokers. Exchanges on London, unaffected by the fluctuations in Gold through the greater part of the week, closed at about 148 ₩ bank.

The Import entries of the past week, including the Dry Goods return, in our last paper, amount to $1,530,306 against $1,096,726 same week last season. The export clearances of Domestic Produce amount to $3,983,918, against $2,846,445 same week in 1861. The Export of Specie is $1,408,000.

The tables of the Foreign Trade at New-York, published a few weeks since, make the Import entries of Foreign Merchandise, exclusive of $1,203,000 in Specie, for ten months of the calendar year:

Jan. 1 to Oct. 31, 1862	$157,278,010
Add five weeks since November	15,226,811
Total to date, 1862	$172,504,821
Against same time, 1861	111,229,808
Increase since Jan. 1	$61,275,013

The same tables make the Export Clearances of Domestic Produce and Miscellaneous Goods, including Foreign articles reexported, from Jan. 1 to Oct. 31, 1862:

Jan. 1 to Oct. 31, 1862	$157,278,010
Add five weeks since November	15,226,811

Against same time, 1861	124,406,712
Increase since Jan. 1	$48,097,909

The Exports of Specie from Jan. 1 to Oct. 31 were:

Jan. 1 to Oct. 31 were	$49,592,906
Add since 1st November	7,015,000
Total to date, 1862	$57,607,906

The week was an exciting one on the Stock Exchange, owing to the meeting of Congress, and the various and contradictory rumors from Washington in regard to the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury. Early in the week rumors were rife on the Street, said to be based upon private information of the substance of the Report, to the effect that a further issue of U. S. Notes for circulation would not be discouraged by the Secretary, although not asked for in direct terms. These rumors were the more readily credited by certain operators on the Stock Exchange who had been previously selling on a different opinion, because of the well understood preference of some of the members of the Ways and Means, who had either passed through this city on their way to Washington or otherwise heard from. When the Report itself was received on Friday it soon became known that Mr. CHASE proposed to rely upon other means for supplying the Treasury, and that so far as any new circulation is concerned, his recommendations are confined to a Federal Banking system based upon United States stocks. The effect was a reaction in stocks as violent as the previous advance had been rapid. When the Report was further digested on Saturday, the disposition of the market was to recovery again. The various alternations of the week are noted in the above table. The week opened on low figures, and ultimately closed about ½ per cent. higher than the last prices of Saturday week, the ups and downs in the mean time being equal to 3⅞⅞ per cent. on the Railway shares, and even more on American gold coin and United States notes for customs.

The public are cautioned against individual Change Notes in the shape of checks on certain out-of-town Banks, especially such as are made on some of the newly started Free Banks in Jersey City.

The Commercial Bank of Troy, anxious to close up its affairs, is paying 1 ₩ cent. premium for the return of its Circulating Notes.

In our estimate of last week of the outstanding issue of the United States Notes, still receivable for Customs, we are assured that about 80 ₩ cent. of the whole Customs of the Government are received at the port of New-York since the blockade of the Southern ports. From the report of the Treasury of the Customs for the first quarter of the present Fiscal Year, July 1 to Sept. 30, 1862, we discover that the proportion at New-York is only about 75 ₩ cent., which would reduce the outstanding issue to the close of November, [illegible]

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

The Army of the Potomac has made no advance yet, though a movement will probably not be much longer delayed. In anticipation of it, the rebels, it is understood, have extended their lines several miles further down the Rappahannock, supposing, no doubt, that Gen. BURNSIDE, when he does cross the river, will prefer to do so under cover of the gunboats. It is believed, in well-informed quarters, that JACKSON has arrived near Fredericksburgh, and has joined his forces to those already there. Saturday night was intensely cold, and some of our troops felt the want of blankets. Ice was found in Potomac and Aquia Creeks, and the roads in the vicinity were frozen hard.

The news from the Southwest is becoming interesting, as the plans of Gens. GRANT and SHERMAN become more fully developed. The advance of the two columns of National troops under the immediate command of these two Generals is not the only movement against the enemy in Mississippi. The expedition under Gen. HOVEY, which recently left Helena, we now learn made a landing at Friar's Point, some fifteen or twenty miles below, and marching inland, occupied Grenada on Monday last. A large number of the citizens fled on the approach of our forces, and some fifteen or twenty locomotives, and about a hundred cars were burned. We learn from the St. Louis Republican that a large proportion of Gen. HOVEY'S Expedition consists of cavalry, which indicates that the work assigned to it is to be done rapidly. This work, undoubtedly, is to obstruct the retreat of the rebel army down the Mississippi Central Railroad, and to compel a battle with the combined National forces marching southward.

A dispatch, dated Cincinnati, Dec. 3, has these items: "Gen. ROSECRANS has made a forward movement toward Murfreesboro, and as the enemy have made a stand there, and determined to give battle, an engagement during the present week is expected. The National army has advanced with limited transportation, and ten days' rations. The enemy are claimed to be well fortified between Murfreesboro and Dechard, in a naturally strong position. McCLERNAND's expedition will not fairly get off before Christmas. The gunboat Indianola, built on the Monitor style, heavily cuirassed in iron, and of powerful build, is at the wharf, but will not get away for a week to come. Gen. GRANDIN's army is actively on the move, and important results from his line of march are anticipated. Gen. WASHBURN is in Louisville on an important mission."

Gen. ROSECRANS is organizing a train of 5,000 pack mules, to give his army efficient and sufficient means of transportation when it moves.

Gen. DIX informs the War department of a brilliant and successful affair in Greenbrier County, Western Virginia. Col. PARROTT, of the Second Virginia Cavalry, supported by the Eleventh Ohio Infantry, made an attack on a post of the enemy, near Cold Knob, surprising the rebels, capturing two commissioned officers, one hundred non-commissioned officers and privates, one hundred horses, two hundred stand of arms, four wagons, and the camp equipage of a regiment—all without the loss of a man.

On Dec. 3 dispatches were received at headquarters in St. Louis from Gen. BLUNT, stating that Gens. HERRON and MARMADUKE were concentrating their forces, 25,000 strong, preparatory to an attack upon him. Gen. BLUNT will not retreat, and as reinforcements under Gen. HERRON are on the way, there is a prospect of another battle near the scene of the last at Cane Hill.

Brig.-Gen. H. E. Brown telegraphs from Springfield, Mo., Dec. 6, that Major Kelly, commanding forces at Greenfield, sent out an expedition in the direction of Osceola, which resulted in the killing of J. P. MORRIS, a rebel Lieutenant and eleven privates, capturing ten prisoners, ninety-six horses, with equipments and the entire camp equipage of Capt. JOHNSON's band on Horse Creek. The camp was surprised—our men marching sixty-three miles in thirty hours.

Gen. VEBER, Military Governor of Norfolk, on Saturday issued a proclamation and a writ of election for a Member of Congress for the Norfolk District, of Virginia, comprising the counties of Norfolk, Princess Anne, Nansemond and Isle of Wight, with the cities of Norfolk and Portsmouth. It is expected that a large vote will be polled, as the inhabitants are anxious to save themselves from the effects of the President's Emancipation Proclamation.

Ex-Col. FORD, in a card which appears in the Columbus (O.) Fact, denounces in strong terms the Harper's Ferry Commission. He says the report is false and unfair in its statements, and the facts have been suppressed for fear that certain prospective promotions might not take place. His application to Judge HOLT for the privilege of publishing that part of the testimony relative to him was denied. He intimates that facts will sooner or later appear that will show who should be held responsible for the surrender of Harper's Ferry.

GENERAL NEWS.

By the arrival on Saturday of the steamship Ocean Queen, we have advices from the Isthmus of Panama to the 28th ult., and later news from Central and South America. The Ocean Queen brought upwards of $700,000 in treasure. A severe gale, accompanied by a heavy sea, commenced at Aspinwall at 2 A. M. on Saturday, Nov. 22d, doing great damage to the shipping, wharves, &c. About daylight the Royal Mail Steamship Company's Steamship Avon, lying at the Middle Wharf, tore down part of the wharf, dragged her anchors, parted her hawsers, and went on shore. About the same time, the British brig Bellver, lying at the same wharf, parted her moorings and struck the beach. Neither of them could be got off. The Avon took in a million of dollars in specie the evening previous, but it had all been recovered after the gale abated. The United States brig Dumbarton dragged her anchors to within a few fathoms of the reef. Her guns, spars, stores, &c., were all thrown overboard, and on Sunday her officers and crew abandoned her; but as she still held on, they took possession of her again on Tuesday. Other vessels were also seriously damaged. The gale was accompanied by very heavy rain, which caused the waters in the interior to rise so as to overflow the railroad track at different places for miles; at some points it was ten feet above the track. There was no communicating with Panama by train from Saturday evening until Thursday evening, when the passengers from England for South America crossed. The passengers from San Francisco for New-York arrived at Panama Tuesday morning, but could not cross until Friday morning. The passengers and mails from South America for England were left behind at Panama, as they were not able to cross in time for the steamer from Aspinwall. Thirty-four inches of water had fallen at Aspinwall from the 1st to the 28th of November. The Ocean Queen brought news from Central and South America, but it presents no features of special importance.

At the Produce Exchange meeting, on Saturday, in aid of the starving operatives of Lancashire, England, addresses were made by the President of the Commercial Association, Mr. JAMES P. WALLACE, Rev. THEO. L. CUYLER and Prof. J. H. RAYMOND, of Brooklyn; and contributions were received to the amount of $6,450 in cash, 300 barrels flour and 1,500 bushels corn. A permanent Relief Committee was appointed, to solicit and take charge of contributions, and see that they were promptly forwarded to the proper destination.

The Board of Aldermen met at 1 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, and transacted considerable business of a routine character, and very little of general interest. A supplementary bill of Fourth of July expenses, (chiefly for advertising,) amounting to $297, was ordered to be paid, as was also a bill, amounting to $1,545, incurred on the reception of the Twelfth Regiment from the seat of war the last time, and a dinner given afterward to the officers of the corps at the St. Nicholas. A bill of workmen engaged in exhuming remains from the old Potter's Field, in 1860, amounting to $533 56, was discussed, and finally laid over. The work was ordered by Mayor WOOD, but was stopped by Comptroller HAWES, after several hundred dollars had been paid on it, because he was satisfied that it was a swindle. Last year the bill was ordered by the Common Council to be paid out of Mayor WOOD's contingent fund, but he vetoed this plan of payment. It is now proposed to pay it out of the donation fund, which Mr. BOOTH says will not bear it. He proposes to put it in the tax levy next year, believing that the workmen deserve their wages. Adjourned till 1 o'clock P. M. on Monday.

The Aldermen, as City Canvassers, have made rapid progress in canvassing the returns of the recent Charter election. The returns so far examined have proved unusually free from errors. The attendance at the sessions of the Board has been very light, no result heretofore published being considered doubtful. On Friday the Board consumed six hours in canvassing. On Saturday they were in session only an hour, and adjourned to meet on Monday, at 10 o'clock A. M. The Districts canvassed, so far, are those of Messrs. Smith, Walsh, Hall, Brady, Chipp, Mitchell, Frear, Froment and Farley. Eight Districts remain to be canvassed.

The Annual Fair and Festival for the benefit of "The Industrial School Association and Home for Destitute Children," of Brooklyn, has been held for the past two days in the Academy of Music in that city. Saturday evening a meeting was held in the auditorium of the Academy and was addressed by Rev. Mr. WILLETS, Mr. JESSE C. SMITH, and Rev. Mr. DE HASS. It is supposed that the Fair and the meeting will realize over three thousand dollars.

Maj.-Gen. SIGEL has written a letter to Gov. SALOMON, of Wisconsin, contradicting the story that the Twenty-sixth Regiment of that State disgraced themselves at the evacuation of Thoroughfare Gap. He says: "Although I am sure that you have more confidence in the valor and discipline of the noble Twenty-sixth (the only regiment of Wisconsin soldiers attached to this corps) than to believe such a scandalous report, I think it nevertheless my duty to say that the Twenty-sixth Wisconsin was not at Thoroughfare Gap when we marched from there to Centreville, and that the whole story about throwing away arms and burning tents is a most malicious and infamous misrepresentation and lie, brought up by some treacherous scoundrel, who should be regarded and held up before the public as an official rebel agent and sensationist. It affords me pleasure to say that the Twenty-sixth Wisconsin is in the best spirits, and, by constant exercise and drill, in excellent health."

The oil from the wells in Oil Creek, Pennsylvania, is floated down to the Allegany River by means of artificial freshets, the water being collected for this purpose in ponds, from which it is allowed to escape at stated periods by opening sluices. In nearly every freshet large quantities of oil are lost, unavoidably, or through the carelessness of boatmen. The freshets on Tuesday and Friday of last week were among the most disastrous that have yet occurred, the oil lost being worth, at the lowest calculation, $100,000.

The Stock Exchange on Saturday was lower early in the forenoon, both for Railway Shares, Treasury 7.30s ▼ cents, and Gold Coin, but recovered 1@1 ▼ cent before the close of the day. Gold, 131½; Exchange on London, 146 ▼ cent.

Breadstuffs were in limited demand on Saturday, and the principal kinds were a trifle cheaper. Provisions were moderately active at essentially unaltered rates. Groceries, Hemp, Metals, Oils, Candles, Coal and Naval Stores were sparingly purchased. Cotton was very quiet and nominally a shade lower. Hay, Hides, Leather, Wool, Fruit, Fish and Foreign Liquors were in fair demand. The freight market was more active, with 559 vessels of all classes in port.

CHEAP PATRIOTISM.—Gov. MOREHEAD, of Kentucky, who graduated at Fort Lafayette, after a few easy lessons in treason, has lately been delivering lectures in Europe on the intolerable despotism of the American Government. The Governor's animosity to the United States has lately taken a new turn, and vents itself now in hypothetical threats against the South and the State of his nativity, if they should prove less inveterate in treason than himself. He has changed the place of his sojourn abroad to Paris, from which city he fulminates as follows: that "if, under any circumstances, Kentucky ever returns (!) to the Union, he will abjure her, as he will the entire South, if she does not fight till the last man is killed, for her independence."

Gov. MOREHEAD's chief wealth consists of a large cotton plantation "well stocked with likely negroes," in the neighborhood of Lake Providence, Mississippi. Seeing that if the South fails in its rebellion, the Governor's entire worldly wealth will be confiscated and lost to him forever, and that he himself, in that event, could only return to Kentucky, or to any part of the North, as an admitted rebel, exposed to the usual laws against such, his indignant virtue in "abjuring" his native land in that contingency would not reach a very high pitch of moral sublimity. His personal safety would be jumping directly in the line of his patriotism.

The Confederates will find a new impulse to their determined resistance in the known views of this self-banished rebel. In his safe Parisian retreat he cheers them on to the deadly work before them. If they fail, they are assured of his eternal displeasure; if they succeed, they save him and his niggers.

The Speech of Vice-President Stephens.

Monsieur Tonson has come again. ALEX STEPHENS, as our readers saw on Saturday, has turned up with another speech—this time at the lively hamlet of Crawfordville, Ga. We can hardly recognize him. He looks the very Knight of the Rueful Countenance. Assuredly some great grief has overtaken him. Some twenty months ago ALEX was radiant with hope. "If we are true to ourselves, our destiny and our high mission," he exclaimed in his memorable speech of adhesion to the Montgomery Constitution, "Slavery must become the controlling power of the continent." He predicted that "the Border States will be compelled to join their fortunes to this principle," and pronounced it probable that "all the great States of the Southwest shall gravitate this way." His speech, some four months afterwards, when on his mission from the Confederate Congress for war-funds, though more subdued in some respects, yet abounded with confidence. He declared that "cotton is the tremendous lever by which we can work out our destiny under Providence," and vouched that "one thing is certain—in some way or other the blockade will be obliged to be raised, or there will be revolution in Europe." A change has come over the spirit of Alex's dream. In the present effusion there is not a promise, nor a prediction, nor a hopeful word. From one end to the other, it is but one strain of lamentation, deprecation, and desperation.

The speech was opened by an appeal ad misericordiam, to the contractors and jobbers, "not to make profits out of articles needed by men in the field." It was terrible to do so. This was the most calamitous war ever known since the Christian Era. "We all feel it." Contractors and jobbers should have some mercy. Mr. STEPHENS realizes that "the responsibility and guilt of the war must be fearful somewhere;" but anxiously deprecates the putting of this responsibility and guilt upon himself or his associates. He pleads that it all comes from the wicked obstinacy of the North in refusing to abide by the principles of the Declaration of Independence, that "all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." With characteristic rebel willfulness the rebel Vice-President mutilates and perverts the doctrine of the Declaration. What he quoted was only part of the sentence. The very next clause qualifies it so as absolutely to make the passage read against him—its language being, "Whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends [i. e., life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness,] it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it." The very crime of the Confederacy is that they have undertaken to destroy a Government which was not destructive of these ends; in other words, that they rebelled without necessity. The whole body of the Declaration is taken up with a recital of the "long train of abuses and usurpations" which could gain no redress, and which left no recourse but revolutionary resistance. In the judgment of our fathers, it was not enough that they desired a new Government; they had to show that the old Government was an insufferable engine of oppression. The Declaration upholds revolution only as an extreme resort. Its whole tenor is a recognition that nothing short of virtual necessity can justify resistance to established authority. The right of revolution is like the right of taking life. There is such a right, but only in an extreme case. Self-preservation alone confers it. For ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS and his fellow-criminals to plead the example of our fathers as a justification of their acts, is as brazen as it would be for a wanton murderer to plead the example of a man who had used the knife to save his life. The murderer might as decently appeal to the code on justifiable homicide, as these rebels to the Declaration on justifiable revolution. All this deprecation of the stern verdict of history is futile. The "fearful responsibility and guilt" of this war will rest forever against those who, for no good cause, raised their parricidal arms against the constituted authorities of the land.

The Vice President holds out no hope; and yet he invokes his hearers "never to give it up." "Let the world know," he says, "and let history record this fact, if such should be our unhappy fate, that, though our country may be invaded, our land laid waste, our cities sacked, our property destroyed, the people of the South would die in defence of their rights, but they could never be conquered." This is the language of desperation. We have no doubt that it is the real feeling of the rebel leaders. They know that a restored Union, even if it spared their lives, would seal their political fate forever. They staked their all on the cast, and there is no room for hope if it goes against them. But their present followers will not put themselves in such desperate straits. No people, in the mass, have ever yet died for any cause, and the examples of New-Orleans and Norfolk, Newbern and Nashville and Memphis, show very conclusively that the Southern people will be no exception. The leaders may rush on to destruction as recklessly as they please, and may implore the masses ever so piteously to follow suit, but there is a limit beyond which the people at large cannot be made to go, and that limit is a long way short of "the last ditch." Though there were an Alexander Stephens at every crossroad in the Confederacy, they could not persuade the people to such extravagance of folly as he has urged them on to. The rebel masses will be conquered into submission to the Constitution, and will live, if for nothing else, at least to teach their children to curse the day on which they ever gave themselves up to the revolutionary rule of DAVIS and STEPHENS.

Diplomatic Correspondence.

We publish this morning a selection from the mass of diplomatic correspondence sent in to Congress by the Secretary of State. So rapid is the progress of events in this war, that incidents a year old lose much of their interest, and very many of the questions discussed in Mr. SEWARD's letters have already passed beyond the domain of public curiosity. Many of them, however, throw considerable light on the motives of various movements of our Government, and supply an interpretation of its action which the public will be glad to receive. This feature of the correspondence applies especially to what has been done, and left undone, on the subject of Slavery.

Mr. SEWARD has at no time concealed or overlooked the fact that the rebellion, if protracted for any considerable time, must inevitably involve the destruction of Slavery, and thus lead to a complete reconstruction of Southern industry and a corresponding revolution in the whole system of Commerce between the United States and foreign nations. But he has always hoped and believed that, in the absence of foreign intervention, the rebellion might be quelled without the necessity of resorting to a measure so extreme; while at the same time he has pointed out, especially in his letter to Mr. ADAMS of February 17, of the present year, the fallacy of the opinion, which secession agents have carefully propagated in Europe, that the United States were engaged in an attempt to strengthen Slavery. When, however, the progress of the war rendered it necessary to issue the Proclamation of Emancipation, Mr. SEWARD vindicates it against anticipated objections abroad, and urges that, while its results will be beneficial to the cause of humanity, it is to be regarded purely as a military act.

Mr. SEWARD discusses, also, at length, in the letters which we copy, the subject of the blockade, the project of intervention, and the other topics to which the events and speculations of the year have given rise. His correspondence is marked by the same general characteristics as that of the preceding year. He is always sanguine, allowing no disasters or disappointments to check for a moment his cheerful courage, and insisting in almost every letter that the rebellion is just at its last gasp. While we cannot too much admire the mental and moral elasticity which such a temper indicates, and although Mr. SEWARD's prophecies ought, upon every principle of justice and of right, to have come true, events have proved too stubborn for them, and they still remain to be fulfilled. We trust that the next six months may put a different face upon his predictions and upon the general aspect of public affairs.

The correspondence thus far published relates entirely to our relations with England. We shall have occasion to refer to the remaining portion hereafter.

The Hanging of 300 Indians.

We published, yesterday morning, a letter addressed to President LINCOLN by the Members of Congress from Minnesota, concerning the fate of 300 Indians who have been convicted of participation in the horrible massacres of the past summer in that State. These 300 Indians have been sentenced to be hung; and the Members of Congress from that State, having heard that the President intended to pardon them, have addressed him this letter. They relate incidents of the massacre calculated to impress the President, as they must impress the world, with a sense of the unredeemed brutality and ferocity which marked the acts of these Indians, and which form part of their character. Nothing can be more conclusive upon this point than the facts they narrate. That every one of these monsters deserve death,—that justice will be deprived of part of its due, so far as the action of human tribunals is concerned, if they are not hung, no one can for a moment question. And still more evident is it that every relative, friend and neighbor of those who fell victims to the ferocity of these bestial miscreants will feel personally outraged if a single one of them should escape the gallows.

We must, however, submit to Senator WILKINSON and his associates, that the President of the United States has a larger duty to perform than that which grows out of the feelings of individuals, or of a local community, however large that community, and however just those feelings may be. The simultaneous execution of 300 persons, no matter what may have been their crimes, is an awful event—one which is without example, so far as we are aware, in the history of any Christian nation, unless France during the Reign of Terror is entitled to that appellation; and one which cannot fail to effect largely and seriously the character of the nation in the eyes of the world and on the pages of permanent history. Its effect, moreover, on the tribes of Indians hovering on our Western Border is, to say the least, a matter demanding the most serious consideration, and on which those who have had the largest official and other opportunities of forming a judgment, have not come to the same conclusion as that expressed by the members of Congress from Minnesota in their memorial. The Indian Commissioner, Mr. DOLE, for example, does not hesitate to say that their indiscriminate execution, drawing no distinction between the leaders who instigated the massacre and those who blindly followed their commands, would beget in their savage breasts a "feeling of revenge which might be smothered, but would never be extinguished."

However this may be, it is the duty of the President to take all these aspects of the case into his most attentive and serious consideration; and his action, if it be such as the nation has a right to expect at his hands, must depend upon these large and comprehensive views. Without attempting at present to express any opinion as to what that action should be, we must protest most urgently against the motives by which the Minnesota members of Congress have attempted to control it. They are these:

"The people of Minnesota, Mr. President, have stood firm by you and your Administration. They have given both you and it their cordial support. They have not violated the law. They have borne these sufferings with a patience such as but few people ever exhibited under such extremities. These Indians are now at their mercy, but our people have not risen up to slaughter them, because they believe that the President would deal with them justly.

"We protest against the pardon of these Indians, because if it is done, the Indians will become more insolent and criminal than they ever were before, believing, as they certainly will believe, that the Great Father at Washington either justifies the act or is afraid to punish them for their crimes. We protest against it because if the President does not permit these executions to take place under the forms of law, the enraged people of Minnesota will dispose of these wretches without law." It is one which in justice alike to themselves and their constituents, these gentlemen should never have permitted themselves to urge. The fact may be as stated. We can understand perfectly and can make all due allowance for the feeling that would prompt the mob-massacre of these wretches in the case supposed. But it is not creditable to their own sense of social character, for members of Congress to put forward such a purpose as a menace to the President, intended to overawe and control his action upon one of the most solemn and awful questions ever brought to his official cognizance. Their duty and his, so far as that point is concerned, is perfectly clear. It is to take all needful precautions against an event so perilous to the character and fortunes of the State and the nation, against which they have now been fully forewarned.

We have not the slightest fear that the President will underrate the importance of inflicting upon these inhuman savages precisely that punishment which will, on a large view of the case, best subserve the ends of justice, promote the safety and welfare of the Western people, and consult the honor and permanent credit of the country. Whether this will exact or permit the execution of every one of these 300 convicts, or whether it will dictate the hanging of part of them, and the infliction of some equally efficacious, but less shocking penalty upon the rest, is a question we are disposed to leave wholly to his own careful and conscientious judgment. We only protest against an attempt to influence that judgment by such motives and menaces as those addressed to him by the members of Congress from Minnesota.

GRENADA CAPTURED—ITS IMPORTANCE.—The days of the rebellion in Mississippi seem to be numbered. A few days ago Gens. GRANT and SHERMAN were pressing down rapidly upon the rebel front, supposed to rest on the Tallahatchie River, some twenty miles south of Holly Springs. Without waiting for an attack, the enemy hastily abandoned his position and retreated, burning large quantities of stores. This retreat was surprising and sadly disconcerting to the rebel population in the rear of the rebel position. It caused plantations to be deserted on the instant; immense crops of cotton were left ungathered in the fields; and the people, white and black, commenced a tumultuous stampede southward.

We had occasion at the time to speak of this unaccountable flight of the rebel army. But we now have, no doubt, the explanation. Some short time since, Gen. HOVEY left Helena, Ark., with twenty thousand men, on transports, whom he landed at Friar's Point, twelve miles below, on the Mississippi side. With these men, it was supposed, he meant to make an overland march of about seventy miles, to Grenada—a very important railroad point, the occupation of which would cut off the rebel army on the Tallahatchie from all communication with Jackson or Vicksburgh. This would be fatal to the rebel force in Northern Mississippi. It would be crushed between the overwhelming Union forces north and south of it, or compelled to a speedy and disorganizing retreat eastward toward the line of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, which would leave Jackson and Vicksburgh to the mercy of the Union army. And this would insure the immediate opening of the Mississippi River and the expulsion of the rebel armies almost entirely from the State.

After the landing of Gen. HOVEY's expedition at Friar's Point, we had for some time no note of him. But it is now likely the rebel army on the Tallahatchie had, and that their precipitate retreat was caused by the information by telegraph from Grenada, that the latter place was threatened by Gen. HOVEY's march inland. They may have hoped to fall back, by railroad, to Grenada, in time to save the place. But in this, if it was their calculation, they have been disappointed. It is announced in the Memphis papers that Gen. HOVEY has reached and occupied Grenada almost without opposition. This, if true, is one of the most important achievements in the South-west. It puts the entire railroad system of Mississippi in possession of our troops, renders the immediate reduction of Vicksburgh absolutely certain, and so damages the internal communications of the rebel armies in Mississippi as to almost insure their destruction.

MANŒUVRING WAR VESSELS—THE KNOKUK.—An incident at the launch of the "Whitney Battery, Keokuk, on Saturday, was a timely commentary on the new principle of war-ship construction embodied in that vessel—two independent screw-propellers for rapid turning. As the iron-clad was disposed to be leisurely in taking to cold water, the Stillman Witt, steaming, having one screw, was signaled to send her a hawser and try occasion. Now, if the Keokuk should ever be called upon for similar service, she would reverse one of her screws, drive the other ahead, turn on her heel and back up, about as fast as we write the process. But the Stillman Witt, with one screw, could turn round only on a long radius by a succession of cruises forward and back, which she made, and in about a quarter of an hour got her stern where her head was, made fast her hawser and pulled out the Keokuk.

What is a mere convenience in the commercial marine is beginning to be deemed a necessity in the navy. In attack and retreat, in keeping the strong side of a battery or protection next the enemy and vulnerable or wounded parts away from him, in striking a direct blow as a ram, in wriggling out of the jaws of the foe when surrounded, and out of or into narrow channels when fighting in shoal water, and in all conceivable manœuvering, the power of rapid turning without making headway, is obviously in the same range of importance as high speed and invulnerable armor.

This power is one of the leading features of the Stevens battery. It was designed and put in operation by the father of the present Mr. STEVENS, in 1804; and his two-screw vessels—perhaps the first craft that could really be called a steamboat—is now in tolerable preservation at Hoboken. Only one other American iron-clad has two screws, the Onondaga, building at the Morgan Iron-works. Meanwhile the English are appreciating the advantages of the system. The Admiralty are experimenting with reference to the application of auxiliary turning power to the Warrior and her consorts. Capt. SYMONS, of London, has designed a two-screw war vessel, and the experts are beginning to urge it there, in a form which means that it will be adopted, while we are hesitating, especially since the trial of a commercial vessel similarly constructed—the Flora, (about the size of the Keokuk,) which turned a complete circle on her centre in three and a half minutes.

Two screws have other advantages. For instance, in light-draught vessels there is not depth enough for one screw of sufficient diameter to give the required speed. Two screws may double the power without increasing the draft.

We expect to hear that the Keokuk has fought better, held out longer, and damaged the enemy more than any vessel of similar capacity in other respects, but without this important feature of "striking an attitude" at short notice.

INTERNATIONAL RELIEF.—Under this well-chosen designation, the Committee of New-York citizens, seeking to enlist the cooperation of the whole country in the National effort so auspiciously commenced for relieving, at least in part, the sufferings of the English operatives, have made the stirring appeal to the American people which we publish this morning. It speaks for itself—bearing broadly on its face the expanded Christian charity, the duty alike of individuals and communities, of men and nations. It simply and clearly states our national duty as the necessary result of the abundance of food wherewith Heaven has blessed us, and due on every principle of gratitude to our Maker, in generous measure, to the famishing. With a discreet magnanimity, alike wise and generous, the address wholly forbears to degrade its humane labor by any consideration of political expediency, or the slightest allusion to any action, either in the past or future, taken or expected to be taken either by the British Government or the British people.

UNDER NIAGARA—CHURCH'S NEW PICTURE OF THE FALLS.—Our finest landscape painter has nationalized his name by his close and devoted study of our finest waterfall. His grand general view of the great cataract has already identified his fame with the beauty and splendor which his daring pencil was the first successfully to reproduce, making Niagara come to thousands who might never have been able to go to Niagara; and the art-lovers of New-York have now the opportunity of enjoying another aspect of the great water, seized by the same firm hand, and fixed forever in all its combined terror and loveliness upon the obedient canvas.

At the rooms of Mr. GOUPIL, in Broadway, a numerous and appreciative company assembled Saturday, to witness the first exhibition in this country of a picture which Mr. CHURCH has baptised by the expressive name of "Under Niagara." Painted in May last, this picture was sent at once to England, to be chromo-lithographed, and having been purchased in the interval by Mr. MARSHALL O. ROBERTS, of this City, it has just returned to its fortunate owner, who most considerately consents to its public exhibition before adding it to the treasures of his private collection.

"Under Niagara" describes itself in its name. The spectator comes up to the picture with a sense of down-rushing force and volume that fairly takes one's breath. Sketched from the deck of the little Maid of the Mist, Mr. CHURCH's new painting was finished in a single day of fervid and impetuous toil, and while it bears no marks of haste in the composition or in the handling, it lives, and glows and moves, with the vivacious reality of the impression which must have held the artist's brain to his work without pause till the task was done. High up, giddily high, to the left, the white foaming waters lift themselves to the tremendous plunge and form a surging coast of yeasty columns, leap down with an impulse so absolute [illegible] of Troy that our heroes involuntarily for the Thunder of the crash into their abyss.

From the river below the shattered masses rise again in a cloud of purple spray which rolls in full upon field of shimmering vapor, along the lower base of the picture, hence in exquisitely truthful undulations to the finely suggested curve of the horizon, and rising ever higher as it recedes, floats away finally, far to the right, in a deliciously touched smoke of curling mist through which and beyond which—far beyond—the clear, emerald green of the remoter fall gleams luminous and enchanting upon the eye.

This is the whole picture. The rush of waters—the drapery of mist—the tones of height and distance—and above, in a contrast all the more exquisite that it is left first to hint and then reveal itself—the calm, ethereal blue of the skies.

These are all the elements of the painting—they are all the elements, also, of the ocean—and the painter, as all, we think, who saw it Saturday feel, is the ocean. It is Niagara in motion. Niagara felt and heard as well as seen, and it will take its place at once in the permanent company of landscapes really great, as the reflection of a great mind in nature from the mirror of a seeing eye and understanding heart. Its technical merits are of a very high order, and in the treatment, both of the river-water and of vapor, Mr. CHURCH shows a positive advance upon the already remarkable excellence in these particulars of his previous and more extended view of the great cataract.

CAMPAIGN OF THE MISSISSIPPI--THE SITUATION

Consolidation of the Rebels of Corinth—The Three Armies of the West—Whole Lines of Movement—Coming Events—The Night Frame Adopted.

THE ENQUIRER, Nov. 28th.

Cheer up, again, I say. The change in our Commanders has worked as great a change in our prospects as have thick glorious sun and clear heavens upon the face of nature, but lately clad in the dark clouds of November. Let others feel as they may, I was glad when the President relieved McCLERNAND and BURNS. I hope it was a relief to them, for it certainly was to the country. But let the past bury its dead. Incompetent Generals will hasten to oblivion with the alacrity of a lead ball in water.

Let us return to the present. You have published ROSECRANS' report of the battle of Corinth; the only good report we have had during the war. We can now see clearly what the rebels were the first to tell us, that the battle of Corinth was one of the most important in the war, and one of the decisive. The rebels considered it the greatest misfortune they met with, except the fall of New-Orleans, and they were nearly right. If they had succeeded we should have lost West Tennessee, in all probability; while, by their defeat, we shall recover what remains untaken of the Mississippi Valley. Let us look at the situation and the prospect. The grand army of the West now forms three armies, each larger than any handled by the great FREDERICK. These armies move on different lines, but in such a way that they will all most effectually cooperate with each other. The army of the Mississippi is organizing, and nearly ready, at Columbus, Ky., under Gen. McCLERNAND. The army of West Tennessee is now in North Mississippi—is steadily marching forward under GRANT. The army of Middle Tennessee is steadily advancing under ROSECRANS, who, at Corinth, commanded a corps of GRANT'S army. These Generals are all fighting Generals, and each of them has the excellent qualification of being heartily feared and detested by the rebels. VAN DORN and BRAGG's armies would as soon fight the dragon as GRANT or ROSECRANS. In reply to strictures upon his military skill, (which is certainly open to criticism,) GRANT is reported to say: "I have never failed, and that is all I or the country care about. How or by what means is of minor importance." That is true. The country wants the armies to advance and the rebels crushed. When that is done, there will be little inquiry about how.

The army of McCLERNAND, it is well known, will advance on the axial line of the Mississippi, with a view to clear that great river of all rebels, and lay its great slave plantations under the guns of our gunboats, when Slavery will be between the upper and the nether millstone. By the way, this is the great dread, the awful sickness, which is now lying on the hearts of Southern rebels, Northern sympathizers and European aristocracies. They have tried to make out no harm will be done by the Proclamation! Let Mr. LINCOLN stand firm, and the army do its duty, and the hour of doom to Slavery is come. Let it come! Slavery and the rebellion will be crushed beyond the power of human redemption. And where are the mourners among all the good, the humane, the Christian friends of human welfare? And yet I feel and, that grim-visaged war, with its bloody rhea, must do what every principle of wisdom, every consideration of human happiness, urged the nation to do long ago, by gradual and gentle means. The troops of my native State are now camping amidst the sugar plantations of Louisiana, and, wherever they go, the negroes immediately seize their freedom, and defy their masters. See the beginning of that breaking up of Southern society, which is not conquest, but far worse. The change will be as great as that which broke up the Roman Empire. But, let us return.

The army of GRANT, you know, is steadily making its way into the heart of Mississippi. It will repair the railroads, secure the bridges, and probably be soon at a point in Mississippi where it can cooperate with McCLERNAND, if that be necessary, or turn toward ROSECRANS, if that is necessary. I do not believe the army of VAN DORN will fight short of Jackson or Meridian, but, if it does, I do not believe in its power of successful resistance. If the rebel army there be beaten or driven off, you see, by consulting the map, what immense consequences will follow. All of Mississippi and Louisiana, and a large part of Alabama, including Mobile and Vicksburgh, will be in our possession, irredeemably. Suppose nothing more was done, what remains of the Southern Confederacy? Texas and Arkansas are cut off and made powerless; Tennessee, Mississippi and Louisiana are conquered; and the Confederacy is reduced to only six Eastern States. This assumes, of course, GRANT'S success. The consequences are so tremendous that the rebels will make two or three desperate stands in the end—one in the interior of the State, and the others at Vicksburgh and Mobile.

In the meanwhile the third army of ROSECRANS will advance to a very different but equally important work. You will see, on the map, a triangle, at the angles of which lie Chattanooga, Cleveland and Dalton. I have already referred to this as the key of the rebel country, lying in and on the flanks of the Cumberland Mountains. Once taken we shall command East Tennessee, Southwest Virginia, (including the only important salt works the rebels have,) and Northern Georgia. The grand army of the East will then have nothing left but Virginia and the Carolinas. Surely it can manage them. Thus you see the lines of movement are now where one of two results must happen, and that in a short time. Either the Union cruise must be thoroughly defeated and thrown back, or the Southern Confederacy will be as completely conquered as Poland.

I see the correspondent of the London Times, like a great many stupid people in this country, says the South will be exterminated before they can be conquered! This is great nonsense. They have manifested not the least disposition to be exterminated. Why, we hold two-thirds of Tennessee and half Louisiana, including New-Orleans and Memphis; do the people there show any wish to be exterminated? When WHITFIELD, (a Cincinnati Lieutenant,) visited Mrs. BRAXTON BRAGG, and the sugar-planters of the Lafourche, d'd they jump into the next lagoon and call upon the Nuiads to weep for them? No such thing. They very politely asked for our soldiers to protect them from that corner-stone of republican institutions—their negro slaves! I give the South credit for any reasonable degree of hate toward the Yankees, and any measure of courage and determination; but it is sheer nonsense to talk of any people waiting to be exterminated. What do you suppose the rebel cotton planters around Lagrange, Grand Junction and Holly Springs, are doing? Why, they have got every cart and every mule hard at work, carting cotton to the nearest railroad station to sell to the Yankees. Let nobody trouble themselves about the last ditch or the final extermination. We have a great work to do, and the South a great suffering to undergo; but it will not include extermination. We must destroy their military organization, and take all their forts; and when that is done, it will last forever. What can a people do without arms and armies? You cannot show me a people anywhere on earth who made successful resistance under such circumstances.

The South has a great suffering to undergo, and it is not merely that of conquest. There might be a military conquest, and little suffering to a people; but it is the breaking up of their social system. There is but one way to avoid this—the unconditional submission of the rebels to the laws and Constitution. Can you or any one see any other result? You may talk of peace-offerings as much as you please, but the South will accept of no terms of peace till that very conquest comes of which I have spoken—and then all terms are impossible.

A VETERAN OBSERVER.

AMERICAN AFFAIRS IN FRANCE.

The Armistice—Propositions—Course of the Parisian Press—Interpretations of the Recent Elections—Motives of the French Government—The French in Mexico, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Saturday, Nov. 21, 1862.

Whatever developments have taken place since my last in regard to the armistice proposition go to confirm the two principal points I have already made, to wit: that the measure was intended to produce an impression in France, and that the excuse for it was the attitude of the Democratic Party in the United States.

The official and semi-official papers naturally feel themselves bound to defend the French proposition, in order to render its fall as easy as possible. The Moniteur attacks the English Ministry and declares that in the refusal to accept the French proposition that Cabinet falsifies the sentiment of the British people. The official paper and its satellites also swing in the air, in order to dazzle and deceive the French people, the words "humanity and civilization" as applied to their peace effort in America, and they are trying to impress upon their readers the idea that an analogy exists between the position in the United States and that in Mexico. Mr. LINCOLN is another JUAREZ, Mr. SEYMOUR and the WOODS are the Almontes and the Miradas, and France is the arbiter and civilizer. The Democratic Party, which is represented daily by the French Press as desiring the cessation of the war, is held up as inviting European intervention, and as being ready, like ALMONTE & Co., to enter into a treaty with the foreigner in order to overthrow the despot and demagogue at Washington. You are extremely fortunate in the interest of your temper in not being obliged to read the expositions of American affairs which appear in the foreign Press. But a mistake has been made by the Government at Washington in giving too little importance to the influence of the Press. No efforts have been made by the Government, not one cent has been spent to counteract the constant misrepresentation of the secession Press, until the object sought for—the preparation of the public mind for Government action has been arrived at, and it would not be surprising if the French people should be finally driven into the belief that they have as much of a mission to fulfill in the United States as in Mexico. The French people are thoroughly friendly to the people of the United States; but the secession Press tells them daily that the country is now divided in two, and that their forefathers sided as much one half as the other; that the Southern half besides is more like France than the other, contains more Frenchmen, and—they are not ashamed to print—is more important, commercially, than the other. The latter statement is corroborated in some sort by the circumstance that many workmen are suffering for the want of cotton, while the silk trade with the North is nearly as active as it ever was, and they do not go beyond this superficial argument. There is no telling, therefore, to what extent the public mind of France may be led astray; by skillful manipulation they may be prepared for any action the Government may see fit to follow out, when that action concerns questions as far removed as are those of America.

To such false interpretations—at least it is to be hoped they are false—does the conduct of the Democratic Party in New-York give rise, that a leading French paper says: "The Secessionists here (at Paris) are in the joy of a great triumph. The election in New-York of the Democrat, SEYMOUR, has enchanted them. They say that his first act will be to declare that the Central Government has no longer the confidence of the citizens of New-York, and that he will publish a declaration in which he will announce his separation from the policy of Mr. LINCOLN. He will authorize a refusal to pay the taxes, and will order the return of the New-York troops from the army." It seems to be high time that the patriotic citizens in the Democratic Party should take some steps to set public opinion right as to their real sentiments—in other words, to "define their position."

Notwithstanding the editors of the Liberal Press understand very well the motives of the French Government in proposing an armistice, they leave these motives in the dark in order the better to attack the document. After quoting that part of Prince GORTSCHAKOFF'S reply to the French circular, in which he says that, according to his information from the United States, such an offer from foreign Powers would do more harm than good, La Presse, in the following lines, pushes irony to its extreme limit: "A fact which will be remarked in the note of M. GORTSCHAKOFF," says the Presse, "is the extent to which the information he receives from America differs from that received by M. DROUYN DE L'HUYS. The Russian and English Ministers have drawn from the reports of their diplomatic agents in America a conviction exactly the opposite of that of the French Minister. Both those Ministers declare that a project of conciliation would not only not have any chance of being accepted, but would even turn against the object proposed. The very marked difference which thus exists between the diplomatic information received by France and that received by Russia and England renders intelligible the following phrase, found in the reply of Lord RUSSELL, and of which we did not at first seize the meaning: 'The Government of Her Majesty will communicate to that of France all the information they may be able to receive from Washington or from Richmond on this important subject.'"

I am told this morning that another dispatch has been sent by the French Government to that of England on the subject of a friendly armistice, and that this dispatch is based upon the success of the Seymour Party in New-York. The argument, if I am rightly informed, is this: That the inevitable negro insurrection of the 1st of January, which would not only inaugurate a terrible epoch of barbarism, but would also destroy the cotton culture, ought to be averted, if possible, and that the success of the Democratic Party is an evidence that there is a powerful party in the North willing to cooperate with France and England in the good work. The argument is thought to be sufficient to induce England to return upon her decision.

The Constitutionnel, which has been promising for some days an important article in explanation of the armistice dispatch of M. DROUYN DE L'HUYS, publishes this article this morning over the signature of "One of Your Readers,"—a signature which is believed to cover the name of the Private Secretary of the Minister. This document is mild and almost apologetic in tone, and it would be difficult to draw from it any semblance of hostility toward the United States; it explains in what consists the "ponderation of forces" between the two contending parties, and decides that the position of the National forces at this moment is worse than it was a year ago. At New-Orleans the National forces have only conquered the streets and houses; the whole population mock at and scorn the army of occupation. The article terminates with the expression that under the armistice France would have lent her aid to a restoration of the Union, but that if it had been found impossible to prevent a separation she would have endeavored to diminish the evils that would have attended the separation.

The Siècle says that to it the most striking thing in this attempted American negotiation is the joy of England and Russia in being able to isolate France in America at a moment when with her 40,000 men in Mexico and her cooperating with her neighbor of Mexico, the Southern Confederacy, she appears to be trying to set herself up as the arbiter of American affairs.

In his dispatch to the Italian Government, in reply to the dispatch of Gen. DURANDO, M. DROUYN DE L'HUYS says that it is not in accordance with the general policy of the French Government to exercise any pressure upon foreign Governments. The same principle, it is to be hoped, is to be applied in America as well as in Europe.

In regard to Mexico, more troops, it is said, are about to be sent out. In the fixing of the budget for the coming years, an allowance has been made for the payment of 60,000 men to carry out the projects, whatever they may be, of the Government in Mexico. But little short of 50,000 of these men have been sent out, but whether the rest will be needed or not future developments will show. The consummation of men will, as every one knows, be large, and the French Government believes in large reserves. Strange reports are in circulation in regard to this large force, and very many people are of opinion that the Government really designs lending its aid to the Southern Confederacy.

The adjudication of the contract for rails for the railway from Vera Cruz to Cordova has been given to the English house of BLOUNT & Co., of the Rue de la Paix, Paris. The rails will be of English fabrication, and are to be delivered at Vera Cruz for 215 francs the ton. The number of tons required is 6,100, at a total cost of 1,300,000 francs.

Various reports have been in circulation for the past fortnight, in regard to a complot said to have been discovered in connection with the inauguration by the Emperor of the new Boulevard du Prince Eugene. There is reason to believe there was nothing worse threatened on that occasion than a political demonstration. MALAKOFF.

AMUSEMENTS.

Mr. GRAU's luck as regards the weather was so unexceptionally good on Saturday, that some part of the previous losses of the week was retrieved by the brilliant gathering that attended the "Dinorah" matinée on that day. It must be admitted that the elements and Brooklyn have done their worst to discomfort our always confident and usually fortunate impresario. All the fine nights were showered upon the City of Churches, where people talk about opera but care little for it, and all the stormy ones were reserved for New-York, where people do gratify their curiosity in this and other respects. Let us hope that Mr. GRAU will find the skies more propitious on this the last week of his present season. As for Brooklyn, he can obtain his revenge there on the most economical and reasonable of pians—by staying away. The four nights last given in that cheerful Mausoleum of Art, the Brooklyn Academy of Music, involved a loss of twelve hundred dollars—the Directors contributing to this result by taxing Mr. GRAU an extra fifty dollars per night, because he happened to give opera with heavy expenses, instead of drama, like Miss MAYO, with a small outlay. By not bothering himself with the tedious twaddlers who manage the concerts, Mr. GRAU can thus save twelve hundred dollars on any four nights of any month of the present year. And he is likely to be governed by this judicious view of the matter; for, unmoved by the indifference of the public, he remembers with bitterness the extortion of the huckstering Directors, and swears heartily and in several languages that he will never more set foot in Brooklyn until they have restored to him the two hundred dollars of which he considers himself wrongfully deprived. This settles the matter; for no one supposes for a moment that the Directors will behave liberally in the premises.

At the New-York Academy of Music, MEYERBEER's opera of "Dinorah" will be played to-night for the last time. The work has met with its usual success in this City, as in other capitals of the Old World. It was received with enthusiasm by one set of critics—with contempt by another. In the meantime the public has slowly warmed up to its beauties, and the "houses," in consequence, continue good. We shall be disappointed if "Dinorah" does not become one of the most popular operas in the Italian repertoire. Its withdrawal is rendered necessary by the arrangements of the week, which are as follows: to-night, "Dinorah;" on Wednesday, "Il Ballo in Maschera;" on Friday, "I Puritani;" on Saturday, a grand Matinée. In addition to this, there will be a popular night, at theatre prices, on Tuesday, when "Norma," with LAGRANGE and MORIANI, will be performed. The season ends on Monday, next week, with MOZART'S "Don Giovanni," after which the company will repair to Philadelphia, and return to New-York on the fall of Sebastopol.

At the German Opera the most interesting event of the week will be the benefit to Mr. CARL ANSCHUTZ on Thursday next. The opera selected for the occasion is BEETHOVEN'S "Fidelio"—a work which is grand enough for the most ravenous of classical appetites. In addition to this there will be a presentation of a token to Mr. ANSCHUTZ, and we are sure a hearty amount of applause. About the success of the evening there is no doubt. People not only buy tickets but persist in sending checks to Mr. ANSCHUTZ, so that there is a strong probability of his becoming a millionaire before the end of the week. Let us hope that he will be spared this ignominious fate. To-night the "Poacher" will be performed for the fifth time. The announcements elsewhere are as follows: At Laura Keene's the brilliantly successful spectacle of "Blondette;" at Wallack's the "Clandestine Marriage;" at the Winter Garden "Born to Good Luck," "An Hour in Seville," and "My Precious Betsy;" at Niblo's Garden, Mr. FORREST as Nicholas; at BARNUM's Museum, BOOMERANG'S "Collean Bawn," and at Campbell's Minstrels, Fourteenth-street, a new programme of negro minstrelsy.

M. PAUL JUIGNET'S company of French comedians gave their usual performance at Niblo's pretty saloon on Saturday evening. The pieces selected for the occasion were "Le Feu au Couvent" and "Deux Hommes du Nord," both of which were excellently acted. In the first, Mons. BENOIT GRAVINS made his début, and achieved a success which, if it is justified by subsequent performances, cannot fail to place him at the head of light comedy actors in the City. Mlle. ANNA HAMBURG, as Adrienne, also made a most favorable impression. We are sorry that we cannot say a word or two in praise of the stage management. On Saturday it was slow and tiresome to the last degree.

The HUTCHINSON family will give their first concert of the season in the Brooklyn Athenæum this evening.

If Fortune can be said to smile upon a man when she drives him from pillar to post, and threatens, through a perfect embarras de richesses, to leave him homeless and homeless, the goddess may be said to be positively grinning on Mr. DE CORDOVA. Dodworth's Hall, having proved too small to afford seats, or even standing room, the numerous admirers of this popular humorist, he resorted to Niblo's Saloon, believing that this spacious hall would accommodate all his friends, and leave some little space to spare. Even the capacity of Niblo's, however, proved too limited for the practical manifestation of all the partiality which the public have in store for the gentleman whom they design to honor. Chairs were placed throughout the aisles, and even in the orchestra, on Tuesday evening last, and yet crowds of persons were obliged to go home, without having been able to obtain standing room within earshot of the lecturer. Mr. DE CORDOVA will give the last lecture of the course on Thursday evening, 11th inst., the subject being "Old and New New-York."

Messrs. MASON & THOMAS announce that their eighth season of six soirees of chamber music to be given at DODWORTH'S Room on Tuesday evenings, at intervals of two and three weeks, will commence on the 23d instant. The artists are, as heretofore, Mr. WILLIAM MASON, (piano-forte,) Mr. THEODORE THOMAS, (violin,) Mr. J. MOSENTHAL, (second violin,) Mr. G. MATZKA, (viola,) and Mr. F. BRANER, (violoncello.) The programme for the entire series is as follows:

IV. SOIREE.

1. Quartet, (F major, No. 5.).....Mozart.
2. Trio, (E flat major, Opus 99.).....Schubert.
3. Quartet, (C major, Opus 59, No. 3.)...Beethoven.

V. SOIREE.

1. Quartet, (E flat major, No. 4).....Mozart.
2. Sonata, Piano and Violin, (E major, No. 5.).....Bach.
3. Polonaise, Piano, (A major, C minor, Opus 40.).....Chopin.
4. Octet, (E flat major, Opus 20.).....Mendelssohn.

VI. SOIREE.

1. Quartet, (C major, Opus 33, No. 3.)...Haydn.
2. Sonata, Piano and Violin, (B flat major, No. 4.).....Mozart.
3. Concerto, Two Pianos, (C major,)...Bach.
4. Quartet, (C sharp minor, No. 14.)....Beethoven.

Mr. S. B. MILLS' grand vocal and instrumental concert takes place to-morrow evening at the German Opera House, No. 405 Broadway. Mr. MILLS will be assisted by Madame JOHANNSEN, Herr WERNIGK, the Orion Society and the full orchestra of the German Opera.

Miss TERESA CARRENO will give her fifth and last concert at Irving Hall, on Tuesday (to-morrow) evening, assisted by several well-known artists.

The excellent Band of the Twenty-second Regiment, under the direction of Mr. HELMSMULLER, gave a fine concert at Irving Hall, on Saturday evening. The cold weather interfered very materially with the attendance, but not with the enjoyment of those who were fortunate enough to be present. Mrs. JENNY KEMPTON and Mr. WM. CASPER were the vocalists.

WINTER GARDEN.—Mr. and Mrs. BARNEY WILLIAMS continue their course of pleasant Celtic excitement at this establishment, gathering around themselves nightly crowds of delighted Hibernians. Their present engagement, notwithstanding the inclement weather that has attended it, shows no diminution in the popularity of these mirth-provoking artists. The house has been unusually well attended, and this circumstance, apart from any consideration of the performance, makes it pleasant and cheering to drop in at the theatre, and gaze upon so many faces that are beaming with attention and enjoyment. To criticise the character of the entertainment were a folly. It is a thing of jollity that knocks the critic off his tripod, and rolls him on the ground with aching sides. It has this special object and accomplishes it. The projectiles used are called by courtesy plays, and as a rule are well put upon the stage, and quickly acted, but it is not easy to speak of them as we would of other plays, and this circumstance is the cause of their being, in a measure, overlooked. We owe it to ourselves, therefore, to acknowledge their hearty spirit; the more so, as it has become a sort of fashion to speak slightingly of Mr. WILLIAMS' delineations of Irish character, and to regard them generally as caricatures. It seems to be forgotten that Mr. WILLIAMS has gone through the ordeal of criticism by the very people he represents—perhaps as keen dramatic judges as any audience in the world. In the capital of Ireland, and through all the leading cities, he was recognized as the best living delineator of Irish peasant life. For ourselves, we are content to greet a school of performance which has imparted, and continues to impart, so much pleasure to a large class of the community, and there is but little danger, we think, of its passing from the stage. It certainly never exhibited more vitality than at the present moment.

BANAN'S MANUAL OF GEOLOGY.
Manual of Geology; Treating of the Principles of the Science, with special reference to American Geological History. By JAMES D. DANA, M. A., LL. D., Professor of Geology in Yale College.
This work is intended for the accommodation of those who have not time, in connection with the consideration of this important study, to go through the ponderous volumes of the Dana Geology, but yet desire to obtain a clear and comprehensive view of the principles of the science, and of the results of the labors of the author in stating our conviction that no work which has been issued on science will be hailed with more public favor than this, or will mark more clearly an era in the history of Geological Literature.
The work is an octavo volume of 400 pages, illustrated with over 1,000 chemical figures, and in its entire mechanical execution we have hesitated at no expense of labor which would in any degree add to its permanent merit and value. Price, in heavy cloth, $1; in full calf morocco, tuck, $1 50.
THEODORE BLISS & CO., Philadelphia.
We likewise publish:
Professor Silliman's PRINCIPLES OF PHYSICS, $2 25.
Professor Silliman's FIRST PRINCIPLES OF CHEMISTRY, $1 25.

THE PRODUCE EXCHANGE RELIEF MEETING.

Editorial Contributions by Mistry and Food-Addresses of Mr. James E. Williams, Rev. Thos. L. Cuyler and Prof. Raymond.

At a quarter past 10 o'clock, M., on Saturday, the Produce Exchange, during meeting of the starving operatives of Lancashire, England, was called to order by Mr. JAMES E. WILLIAMS, President of the Commercial Association. Mr. WILLIAM C. RUSSELL acted as Secretary.

The Chairman explained the object for which the meeting had been called, the origin of the relief movement on the part of the Commercial Association, and the necessity for immediate action. Resolutions had been prepared, which Mr. I. HONAKE HENSHAW was called upon to read. The resolutions were as follows:

PREAMBLE AND RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, We deeply sympathize with the unemployed and suffering operatives and their families in the manufacturing districts of Great Britain, and esteem it a privilege, as well as a duty, to contribute to their relief; therefore

Resolved, That a committee of fifteen be appointed by the Chair to solicit contributions for this purpose, and forward the same to England in food, to be distributed under such supervision as the Committee shall direct, to the most needy and deserving of the class.

Resolved, That the Committee have power to add to its number, and to cooperate with other Committees appointed for a similar purpose.

Resolved, That the Committee be requested to correspond with the Boards of Trade, and similar institutions, in other cities, to invite them to unite in this benevolent undertaking.

The meeting was addressed by Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, after which the Chairman announced that the resolutions were before the meeting for discussion.

Professor John H. Raymond was then introduced, and said that he differed with the respective modes by the committee, which had preceded him; that they should send their contributions to our organization formed by the Chamber of Commerce, to be forwarded by the ship certain Modern Gazette; he had no doubt, should be the duplicate of that body; he thought that that ship, large as she is, would be quite small enough for their own contributions. The Professor then read the following note:

NEW-YORK, Dec. 6, 1862.

J. P. WALLACE, Esq.—Dear Sir: The Ward, Mary's ship, will take 1,000 bbls. flour to Liverpool free. Merry shall write me or better Wednesday, the 10th inst., for the suffering English operatives.

Yours truly, R. P. BUCK & CO.

This was a noble offer, observed the Professor, and he felt that it would be responded to immediately. The speaker announced that Messrs. WALSH, CARVER & CHEAS had proposed to provide 100 barrels of flour for the signal. He understood have the equivalent 600 barrels, mentioned further money.

Several contributions of money and dollar subscriptions were made by the Professor. The amounts subscribed in money were as follows:

Thomas Dunham	$1,000
Williams & Guion	1,000
David Dows & Co	1,000
Ballentine & Sons, Newark, N. J	1,000
Geo. B. Fowell & Co	500
Cragin & Co	500
Herman Stutzenbergen & Co	500
Sawyer, Wallace & Co	500
Arthur Tbellon	500
W. W. Chase	400
Snow & Burgess	400
W. A. Brown & Co	300
John Tweddle & Co	300
A. E. Masters	100
C. H. Meday	100
Wallace & Wicks	100
Brice Bros	50
Total cash subscriptions	$8,450

The donations of flour were as follows:

Walsh, Carver & Cheas, bbls	100
Stetson & Son, bbls	100
L. Roberts & Co., bbls	100
[illegible] of Seed, bbls	200
[illegible] ship, the Mary, only required 1,000 barrels of flour free of freight, and he trusted that this amount would be collected by Monday next.

Mr. WM. H. RAYNER said he would be one of ten to furnish each 1,000 bushels of prime shipping corn.

BENJAMIN JONES subscribed 500 bushels of corn.

JOHN MCCOMBSON, cooper, offered to seal a ship, free of charge, to carry the grain, if it should be subscribed.

The Chairman said he was informed that this donation offer was equivalent to a donation of $500, and hoped the grain would be speedily contributed.

Mr. VANDERBILT, president of the Produce Exchange, said, in behalf of the trade, offered to transport 500 barrels of flour, free of charge. Which offer was most cordially received.

Capt. RICE stated that he was authorized, on behalf of the Chamber of Commerce, to say, that they would be happy to cooperate with the Committee from the Produce Exchange in forwarding all supplies.

The Chairman said he was grateful to Capt. RICE and his associates for the kind offer, and felt authorized to say that the organization would be most agreeable to the members of the Produce Exchange.

The Executive Committee were next appointed as follows:

David Dows,	George D. Cragin,
Richard P. Buck,	Wm. De Mangum,
John S. Williams,	R. E. Albertis,
Lewis Roberts,	J. Hobart Herrick,
Stephen W. Carey,	Samuel A. Sawyer,
T. R. F. Randolf,	George Hooper,
John R. Furman,	Robert Taillon,
Capt. Wm. Howland,	Wm. H. Barber,
	Geo. B. Fowell.

A motion to adjourn was next put to the meeting and unanimously adopted.

To the American People.

AN APPEAL FOR THE SUFFERING OPERATIVES OF GREAT BRITAIN.

The blow struck at our national existence has fallen heavily upon the operatives of Europe, and it is announced to us that in England there is unusual suffering and a year of scarcity.

"The agony of Lancashire," says the London Times, "is every day becoming more acute, and before the Winter is ended the sufferings of the people will prove the greatest national trial that we have had since the Irish famine."

When the Irish famine prevailed in 1847 the American people, from the Atlantic to the Mississippi, gladly gave of their abundance; our Government furnished transportation for the food; the British Government afforded facilities for its distribution; and the Queen, whose virtues daily illustrate her words, recognized the friendliness of the act.

Again we are called upon in the name of humanity to relieve men, women and children, who are compelled without fault of their own to face a more fearful enemy than war. The signal comes to those whom God in His Providence has been most bountiful. Amid all the crisis, He has permitted us to meet in the defense of National unity and Constitutional freedom; unmitigated danger has had no place; and despite the withdrawal of an army of citizens to protect the liberties of the Republic, the labors of those who remained have been so plentifully blessed, that America is able, from her surplus, to export largely to other countries.

Let us not be unmindful at this moment of the relations which have opened up to us by the munificence of the Ruler of nations, nor permit our sympathies and burdens to lead us to forget, or to underrate, the peculiar duties that belong to our position. Our agricultural office spreaded over a wide and fertile territory, as yet thinly populated, have made our land one of the granaries to which the nations of Europe that subsist chiefly by manufactures now look for food; and the operations of Immediate temporarily deprived of American cotton, have more than ever occasion for American corn.

Let that corn be forwarded with the generosity that becomes a people who have undergone the greatest trial that can befall a nation; and who know the value of sympathy promptly tendered in the moment of adversity. Let us show our gratitude to Providence for all its mercies, by recognizing the claims of Christian brotherhood, and hasten to relieve the want whose sharp cry comes to us across the ocean.

The Government act of Congress, which gives to each settler in our Western Territories, without regard to his nationality, one hundred and sixty acres of the public land, offers to every foreigner a welcome and a home; but a threatening Winter of suffering demands instant relief, and reminds us of the ancient proverb—"He gives twice who gives quickly."

There is reason to believe, from significant indications, not alone in New-York, but throughout the country, that the people need no urging to activity in this cause, but rather wait with impatience the necessary organization for the convenient transmission of their gifts.

To this end the undersigned, who have been appointed by the citizens of New-York to act in concert with similar bodies, urgently recommend the citizens of every city, town and village throughout the Union to call public meetings, and appoint committees to collect and remit moneys and food to committees on the seaboard; and they respectfully ask the clergy of all denominations at once to bring the subject before their congregations, and to take up collections, that all, according to their ability, may unite in this national and truly Christian work.

They confidently believe that the railroad companies, and the owners of vessels on the lakes, whose property of late has been largely augmented by the misfortune of our countrymen, will cheerfully furnish gratuitous transportation for all donations of food—and that our enterprising shipowners will exhibit the like liberality in furnishing freight room to Europe. They anticipate ready assistance from the country at large, but rely especially upon our food-producing States for prompt and generous contributions from the ample accumulations in their hands.

The undersigned have already received, as will appear by the report of their treasurer, large donations, which they ask us as earnest of more to come, and they record with pleasure the announcement that by the liberality of Messrs. W. L. & G. GRINNELL, a new ship of eighteen hundred tons burthen has been placed at their disposal. They propose to transmit the provisions they shall receive, and those which they may purchase as rapidly and economically as possible, commencing the work without delay, and making such arrangements with persons of probity in Great Britain as shall insure their immediate and judicious distribution.

Communications on the business of the Committee may be addressed to JOHN C. GREEN, Chairman; JOHN TAYLOR JOHNSTON, Secretary of the International Relief Fund, No. 69 Wall-street, New-York. Remittances and consignments may be made to A. A. LOW, Treasurer of the International Relief Fund, No. 81 Beekman-street, New-York, or to any member of the Committee.

The subjoined letter has been received from Mr. THURLOW WEED by Robert R. Minturn, Esq.:

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4, 1862.

DEAR SIR: I am happy to learn that the enterprise about which we conversed in New-York on Tuesday last has been successfully inaugurated.

The organization effected in New-York will speedily aggregate the contributions of our citizens, and relief will be soon on its way to the suffering families of the cotton manufacturing districts of England. There can be no form of suffering which appeals with such emphasis to intelligent American benevolence. Our unavoidable civil war is the immediate, though blameless, occasion of the want of employment and food, which pervades and desolates the manufacturing towns of England. Their distress, therefore, appeals as earnestly to our hands as our hearts. Nor is the fact that our war leaves the laborers of Lancashire without employment and their families without bread, their only claims upon us. They are our friends. While the sympathies of many of the commercial classes of England are with the insurgent States, while the cotton houses of Liverpool were furnishing material aid to the Confederacy, the manufacturing of Lancashire districts and their representatives in Parliament resisted reiterated efforts to secure their cooperation against our blockade and in favor of intervention. Though often enough reminded of the cause of their suffering, the operatives reduced from short labor and diminished wages to idleness and starvation, bear their burthens with a patient fortitude which challenges more than our sympathies. Their destitution and forbearance appeal to us fortified by an argument founded on such eloquent justice, that I am sure it will be responded to with equal alacrity and munificence.

Let us then make haste to "cast our bread upon the waters."

Inclosed please find my check for $1,000.

Very truly yours, THURLOW WEED.

ROBERT R. MINTURN, Esq.

THE CUSTOM-HOUSE REMOVAL.

Removal of More of the Departments—The Naval Office Transferred—Location of the Rooms Recently Occupied—The Work on the Old Custom-house.

Yesterday was one of considerable confusion at the Custom-house, the removal of the departments, long deferred, having been resumed.

A long time ago the Warehouse Department was transferred to the Merchants' Exchange. After its removal it was the only occupant of the building for several months. Within a month or so, however, the Auditor's Department has been removed. The rooms of this department are located on the floor above the rotunda on the side of the building toward William-street. The apartments are two in number, one for the use of the Auditor, the other for his clerks. The large room, in which the clerical work is to be performed, is well fitted for the purpose for which it is to be used. The windows on the William-street side of the building afford plenty of light. Opening with this room is a smaller one, which is intended as a private office for the Auditor. The apartment has been handsomely furnished and fitted up, and is superior in comfort and convenience to any in the old building. A Brussels carpet covers the floor; a handsome chandelier hangs from the ceiling; rich curtains shade the window, and easy chairs make the room pleasant. Yesterday the Naval Office was removed from the old Custom-house. The entry and other departments of the office, with the exception of the Warehouse and Auditor's, will be located on the same floor as the rotunda, the principal part of the business being transacted in the room on Hanover-street, in which will be the desks of the entry clerks, liquidating clerks, deputies, &c. A suite of rooms connecting with this one, and extending around on Wall-street, will be used by the Naval Officer as his private office; adjoining this, and connected with them, on Wall-street, is located a room for the Naval Office Cashier, Manifest Clerk, &c.

The Naval Officer's quarters are about ready for occupation, a carpet suitable for the office having been placed on the floor, chandeliers hung, and other convenience provided.

The Warehouse Department of the Naval Office was not transferred until Saturday afternoon. Its room is on the floor above that of the rotunda, and directly over the one already described as being intended for the use of the principal desks of the Naval Office. The desks and furniture of the department were removed thither some time since and repaired, cleaned and placed in position. All that was needed to transfer the business of the department was to remove the books, papers, records, &c.; this, as already stated, was done Saturday afternoon. Some confusion must exist for a few days, until these books and papers are properly placed, but business will not be interfered with to any great extent. The delay in removal has been so great that orders were sent from Washington this week, as we are informed, to the men in charge of the work, to hasten the removal. In accordance with these orders the removal has been resumed.

Workmen have been engaged for several months in preparing the old Custom-house for the use of the Sub-Treasury. As fast as any department has been removed, a squad of men have immediately commenced cleaning, preparing and altering the vacated rooms. The room formerly occupied as the receiving room of the Naval Office, in the top story of the building, though a good-sized, convenient room, was very dirty. The same was true of the opposite apartment, formerly used by the Liquidating Department. To remedy this evil, windows have been placed in the top of the rooms, so that now they will be very well lighted and quite pleasant. The first work done on the old building was to thoroughly scrub the entire outside portion of the edifice, on which had been deposited the dust of many years. The marble, which had accumulated, on this account, the appearance of granite, is now clear and clean.

The carpenters and masons are now busily engaged in their operations in carrying out the plans for the alteration and improvement of the building.

The entry and other clerks in the rotunda, and the cashier, have not yet been transferred to the new Custom-house. A long time since the rotunda of the Exchange was, to all appearances, ready for occupation; but, when it had been thus placed in order, it was discovered that the high railing inclosing the desks of the clerks was too limited in extent, the space inclosed being insufficient for the use of the clerks; accordingly the work was to be done over again, new railing brought from Philadelphia, and placed in position. The result was, of course, an additional delay. The railing has now, however, been erected, including a much larger space than that before inclosed.

A BECKS CAPTAIN IN DURESS.

A Doubtful Customer.

On Saturday last Admiral GREGORY, of the United States Navy, presented himself at the office of the U. S. Marshal MURRAY, accompanied by a tall, well built, dark complexioned, somewhat repulsive featured, but very polite gentleman, whom he introduced to the Marshal as Jos C. RICE, who claimed to be a Captain in the Confederate Army, and desired a pass into the land of secession. The gentleman were an overcoat which the Admiral, without saying "by your leave, Sir," unbuttoned, and displayed to the Marshal's gaze the uniform of a Confederate Captain as the best proof, in the absence of his commission, of the genuineness of his friend's claim. Admiral GREGORY then went on to state that he found himself unwittingly placed in a very unpleasant and delicate position with regard to Capt. RICE, and he thought his duty to the Government demanded that he should lay the case before the U. S. Marshal, and leave him to deal with it as he should think best, or as he might be instructed by the Government. The facts were these: At the breaking out of the rebellion, Capt. RICE was a Captain of Marines in the United States Navy and was stationed on board the 74-gun ship Pennsylvania at the Gosport Navy Yard, Norfolk, Va. He had for several years previous to that been an intimate friend of Admiral Gregory who, when he was stationed on the coast of Africa, appointed RICE one of the officers of the many integrations of officers in the United States Navy, at the commencement of the rebellion, he did not recollect of seeing Capt. RICE's name, but the Captain now informed him that his resignation was tendered in due form, but had probably been burnt up with the Pennsylvania which was soon after destroyed by the rebels at the time of the burning of the Gosport Navy Yard. The Admiral said he had never been able to ascertain what had become of his friend, Capt. RICE, and had supposed him dead, until about two months ago, when to his surprise, the Captain called upon him here in New-York and stated that he was a Captain in the Confederate Army, had been taken prisoner at the battle of Antietam, carried to Fortress Monroe to be exchanged, and that while there he received a letter from his father, who is a farmer in New Hampshire, informing him that his mother lay at the point of death, and imploring him, her only son, to hasten home that she might look upon his face once again ere she passed into eternity. On representing these facts to the government officers at Fortress Monroe, he was permitted to come North on his parole, and was then on his way to New Hampshire.

The Admiral heard and credited his story—for he had no reason then to doubt it—interest with him into reminiscencies of the past, gave him some patriotic and fatherly counsel, rebuked him for his ingratitude to the Government in turning against her in her hour of trial, and dismissed him to pursue his journey to the bedside of his dying mother.

Two months pass away and the Captain again calls upon the Commodore and announces that he is on his return to his rebel masters. The Admiral did not say that during these two months he had cause to doubt the truth of his friend's statements, but he did say that he could not consent that his loyalty and duty to the Government should by any possibility be compromised, by having it known hereafter that he had held friendly interviews with roving rebel Captains on their bare statement that they were paroled prisoners of war. "How do I know," said he, (addressing the Captain,) "but what you are here to obtain information for the enemy—visiting our navy-yards, inspecting our gunboats, ascertaining our forces? You say you are here on parole, you having taken no oath, but simply your word of honor." (The rebel Captain winced and his lips quivered at these home-thrusts from his old Commander, but he made no reply.) "This," continued the Admiral, "is the most painful act of my life; I wish to God, as I told the Captain this morning, that he never had come near me; but since he has seen fit to place me in this delicate position, my first duty is to the Government in whose service I am, and I felt that I ought not to permit him to escape from my custody until I had brought the case to the notice of the Government, in order that the facts might be investigated. I, therefore, surrender him into your hands, Mr. Marshal, and you must do with him as you think proper."

Marshal MURRAY informed the Captain that under the state of facts, as detailed by Admiral GREGORY, he would be compelled to detain him as a prisoner until he could communicate with the Government at Washington. The Admiral, by transferring him to his custody, had placed him (the Marshal) in the same predicament that the Admiral himself was in, and he could do no less than hold him until he received instructions for his disposal.

The Marshal immediately wrote to Washington, stating the facts and asking for instructions. He will probably learn to day what disposition is to be made of the Captain. If it should turn out that he never tendered his resignation as an officer in the United States Navy, he can be tried by Court-martial as a deserter, or for the crime of giving information and aid to the enemy.

Mason Jones at Brooklyn.

The violent snow-storm which raged on Friday evening, and which so seriously injured the various places of amusement in New-York, did not deter the thousands who crowded the Academy of Music to its fullest capacity, to hear Mr. MASON JONES redeliver his famous oration on "SWIFT, the Witty Dean of St. Patrick's." Inclement as was the evening, the Academy was filled to repletion—parquette, boxes and aisles being without even standing room—and the cream was almost as great as on Thursday evening, at the Academy in Fourteenth-street. That the attraction which could draw such an audience on the most inclement evening we have had this season was of no ordinary kind, was abundantly proved by the appearance of the crowded house itself. As this oration has excited so much interest, and will no doubt cause a good deal of controversy, and has been heard by so many thousands of our readers, we therefore deem it worthy of more than a passing notice. A more difficult subject than "Dean SWIFT" Mr. MASON JONES could not have selected to delineate before a popular audience. Of all the great, witty and eccentric men whom Ireland has produced, SWIFT was the greatest, the wittiest and the most eccentric. His true character is one of the most complex and difficult to be described and understood; and to us he is a perfect enigma. Everything about him was strange, grotesque and unusual, and at the same time powerful and commanding. In the best of his genius, in the force of his intellect, in the grimness of his humor, in the savageness of his satire, in the peculiarity of his habits and in the oddity of his manners he differed from all other men. You cannot measure him by any ordinary standard. He was a man sui generis, and stood alone. He excited the warmest sympathies and the strongest aversions. He was the object of the most tender and lasting friendships and of the most unrelenting enmities. He has been the subject of the highest eulogiums and of the most infuriated invectives. In all things he was original; in many things he was commendable; in a few things he was heroic; in some things he was revolting. With the mass of mankind he never will be a favorite. The moroseness of his temper, his brusque ways, his saturnine disposition and his openly expressed contempt for his species will always prevent him from being popular. On the other hand, his wit, his inimitable humor, the prominent political position he occupied, the important services he rendered to Ireland, and the wonderful creations of his genius in "Gulliver's Travels" and "The Tale of a Tub," will always prevent him from being forgotten, while his share in the Stella and Vanessa tragedy will ever make the story of his life interesting to the lovers of sentiment and romance. Such was the man who has been the subject of one of Mr. MASON JONES' ablest and most eloquent orations. To deal with it effectively required, on his part, an extensive range of reading, long and laborious thought, an impartial judgment, wide sympathy with the hero and a great facility of expression. That the speaker possessed many of these qualifications, no one who ever heard him could deny. And it was curious to watch the intense interest which he excited amongst his vast audience as he told them the story of SWIFT's eventful life, criticised his works, analyzed his genius, compared him with his cotemporaries, repeated anecdotes of his wit and with touching pathos related the sad history of "Stella and Vanessa," and the melancholy death of both—yet the most pitiful of all was the gloomy picture of SWIFT himself, in his closing years, cut off from all his companions, ending his life in insanity and silence, and the great moral which that life so impressively enforced. And all this was done with such excellent taste, and evinced so much artistic power, that while we must differ on many points from Mr. JONES' estimate of his great compatriot, still we must cheerfully accord him his due meed of praise, pardon the slight tinge of partisanship which his address revealed, and indorse the almost unanimous verdict of his hearers that he (notwithstanding the most interesting of the series and did equal credit to his head and heart.

Infirmary for Women and Children.

The Ladies Annual Fair in behalf of this Institution, will commence on Wednesday, Dec. 10, at Dodworth's Hall, opposite Eleventh-street, as announced in another column, and will continue till the following Saturday.

Among the many humane institutions of our City, none is more deserving of the aid and fostering care of a benevolent and Christian community than this. It has completed the eighth year of its existence, and under judicious management, has steadily increased its sphere of usefulness.

The objects of the Institution are to secure to poor women the medical advice of competent physicians of their own sex; to train nurses for the sick, and to assist well educated women, who are studying medicine, in acquiring a practical knowledge of their profession. A Dispensary is connected with the Infirmary, where poor women and children are furnished with medical advice and medicines without charge. The sick poor are visited in their homes by the physicians and students of the Infirmary.

The Institution during the past year of unusual suffering, has furnished aid to more than 6,000 destitute persons. It has also provided a large number of well trained nurses for the sick and wounded soldiers who have thronged our hospitals here and elsewhere.

It especially commends itself to all who are interested in extending the range of employments for women, as well as to all who feel the necessity for providing skillful gratuitous medical aid to those whose privations and exposures make such aid particularly needful.

We hope that the claims of this most efficient benevolent work will be duly appreciated by the public, and that the contributions of the charitable will enable it greatly to increase its means of doing good.

Donations in money, books, useful and fancy articles or refreshments will be very acceptable, and may be sent to the Infirmary, No. 128 East 15th-street.

Among the attractions of the Fair will be a series of tableaux each evening, and the Misses MYER will give some of their very popular musical and oratorical entertainments.

"Home" Charity Bazaar, for the Benefit of the Home for the Friendless.

The Managers of the Home for the Friendless propose to hold a Charity Bazaar, in aid of this Institution, during the second week in December at the Home Chapel, No. 29 East 20th-street.

Useful articles, of every description, are solicited, especially ready-made clothing, for children or adults, of a quality that, if not transmuted into funds, may be used with economy for our large Home household.

The state of the country renders untiring exertions needful to meet the increasing necessities of such work, and whatever may be contributed for this object will be duly acknowledged, and gratefully appreciated by Mrs. C. W. HAWARDS, President; Mrs. R. D. LATHROP, Mrs. S. J. OGDEN, Corresponding Secretaries; Mrs. DR. L. RANDALL, Recording Secretary.

Dr. Asa D. Smith's Lecture to Young Men.

Last evening Rev. Dr. ASA D. SMITH delivered one of a series of Sermons to Young Men, in the Second-avenue Presbyterian Church. The church was respectably filled, chiefly by young men, to whom the Doctor delivered an able and instructive discourse on the "Advantages of Early Piety," which was listened to with marked attention. His text was Eccles. xii. 1, "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth."

Court of General Sessions.

The jury in the case of PATRIC MCARTEY, tried on Friday for manslaughter, found a verdict of not guilty.

The following persons previously convicted, were on Saturday sentenced by the Court:

ISAAC SPINGLE, for grand larceny, State Prison four years and six months; JOHN ROBINSON, for burglary in the third degree, State Prison four years and six months; THEO. MOLNEUX, for grand larceny, State Prison three years and six months; ADELAIDE IRVIN, who was convicted four or five weeks ago of petit larceny, and discharged on her own recognizance, to afford her a chance to reform, resumed her old tricks again and was rearrested and, sentenced on the old conviction to two years in the Penitentiary; JAMES WILLIAMS pleaded guilty to petit larceny, and was sentenced to pay a fine of $100.

The Court adjourned to Monday, at 11 A. M.

GENERAL CITY NEWS.

THE SUICIDE OF WILLIAM W. RICHARDS—ITS CAUSE.—The notices which have appeared in the several newspapers of the suicide of Mr. WILLIAM W. RICHARDS, have, unintentionally, conveyed an erroneous impression as to the causes which led to his act of insanity. Few men in the City of New-York are more happy in their domestic relations than Mr. RICHARDS was, and there are few whose prospects are brighter than were his at the time of committing the act by which his life was terminated. He had the confidence of such men as A. T. STEWART, and every reason to consider himself well furnished for his journey on the "highway to an independence." But for several weeks, what is generally termed a "settled melancholy" was fixed upon him, amounting to insanity, and his death was the result. He was a man of promise—happy in all his family and social relations, with some of the most influential men of the City his friends—and it is due to them all to publish the facts that led to his commission of suicide.

ALLEGED LARCENY BY A POLICEMAN—A SINGULAR CASE.—Officer BROOKS of the Second Ward arrested JOHN BROWER, an officer of the Broadway squad, on Saturday, upon the charge of robbery. Mr. WILLIAM J. SHARP, of Fulton-street was the complainant in the case. He stated that he saw BROWER lying intoxicated upon the sidewalk fronting No. 153 Fulton-street about 6 o'clock Saturday evening, with his arm round the legs of a young man who was standing near him. He went to release the young man and raised BROWER up. The latter not relishing the interference seized Mr. SHARP tightly and inserted his teeth in his nose. He then, as Mr. SHARP states, grasped his gold watch, valued at $100 and took it, first breaking the guard. Officer BROOKS came up at this time, and with the assistance of Mr. DANIEL BROWN, took BROWER to the Station-House. He was yesterday brought before Justice CORNOLLY, where a charge of grand larceny was preferred against him, upon which he was held to bail in the sum of $500. Brower stated in excuse that Saturday was his day off duty and that he met a friend with whom, unwittingly, he drank so freely as not to know precisely what he did do, but says he certainly could not have had the intention to rob any one. He has the reputation previously of having been a good and respectable officer.

CASE OF ALLEGED DRUGGING AND ROBBERY.—JOHN HERWEGEN, a citizen of Philadelphia, on a visit to New-York, went into the lager-bier saloon of GEORGE and ALICE ALBENDORFF, No. 150 Greenwich-street, on Saturday evening. He was at once surrounded by the females of the establishment, whom he invited to drink with him. Shortly after drinking the liquor he became stupid and speechless, and while in this condition he was stripped of his overcoat, and his pocket-book containing $30 taken from him. ALICE went outside and informed Roundsman MILLS and Officer CAREY, of the Twenty-seventh Precinct, that a sick man was in her house, and she wanted him taken out. The officers found the man lying on his back in great distress, and upon investigating the matter, discovered evidences of drugging. The inmates of the place were taken into custody. Two of them named CHARLES PATTERSON and CHARLES MORRIS, were found secreted in the back bedroom, with the missing property in their possession. Morris and PATTERSON were taken to the Tombs and held by Justice CORNOLLY on a charge of larceny, no complaint of drugging being made against them.

VERDICT IN THE CASE OF OSWALD GOULD.—Coroner WILDEY held an inquest yesterday afternoon upon the body of OSWALD GOULD, who committed suicide on Saturday. This case was mentioned at length in yesterday's TIMES. The verdict of the JURY was "Suicide from opium." Mr. BRAMMER, clerk for PETER PETERSEN, druggist at No. 515 Pearl-street, who sold the opium to deceased, is held in the sum of $500 for violating the law in relation to the sale of poisons.

A CONTRABAND DISPOSED OF.—JAMES HIGGRAM, the aged contraband who was brought on here from Fernandina, Fla., with some Confederate prisoners, has been placed in charge of ELISHA BUCKMAN of Bergen County, N. J., who will give him employment on his farm, and pay him wages. Mr. BUCKMAN has taken charge of one contraband before this, and says he finds him a very trusty and useful hand. Since the notice appeared in the newspapers that the Government had directed HIGGRAM to be placed in charge of some trustworthy person who would take care of him, the United States Marshal has received upward of twenty applications for him. Judging from the demand for this article, the great question of what is to be done with the contrabands would seem to be yet easy solution.

THE NEW CUSTOM-HOUSE OPEN TO-DAY.—The old Custom-house was closed on Saturday afternoon. The new one, in the Merchants' Exchange, opens to-day.

SUNDAY PAPERS RAISING THEIR PRICES.—The Sunday Atlas yesterday raised its price to six cents, the Sunday Mercury to six cents, the Sunday Dispatch to five cents, and our namesake of the Sunday Times to five cents.

BROOKLYN NEWS.

THE BROOKLYN SKATING PONDS.—The recent cold weather had the effect of forming ice on the numerous small ponds on the outskirts of the city, yesterday, so as to enable those who desired to indulge in the invigorating exercise of skating. The large ponds were closed to skaters, none of them being in readiness, but if the present weather continues, they will be thrown open to subscribers this week—some to-day.

There are three large ponds in the Western District, all of which have been filled up at great expense, and every arrangement made for the accommodation of the ticket-holders.

The Washington Pond, under the superintendence of Major O. F. GARDNER, is situated near the corner of Fifth-avenue and Third-street, and is accessible by the Fifth-avenue Railroad. The area has been enlarged during the Summer, large and commodious houses have been erected, refreshment saloons established, and the whole inclosed in a substantial board fence. So as to obviate the difficulties of last season, a well-boarded passage-way leads from the avenue to the pond, which enables those who arrive in the cars to reach the ice without soiling their shoes.

The Capitoline Skating Pond occupies nearly the entire space bounded by Nostrand, Marcy, Fulton and Putnam avenues, with a carriage-way 100 feet in width, extending the entire length. On three sides is a raised embankment, 20 feet in width, for the accommodation of spectators. The whole is substantially inclosed with a high board fence. Saloons, under proper restrictions, will be established, and every thing possible will be done for the convenience of frequenters. Skaters can reach the pond by the Fulton-avenue cars.

The Nassau Pond is located in the town of Flatbush, near the city line, and 4½ miles distant from the City Hall. It contains six acres, inclosed in a substantial board fence, with ample buildings and well-conducted saloons. A board walk, 800 yards in length, reaches from Flatbush-avenue to the ice, where will take the Flatbush-avenue cars to reach this pond. Both the Capitoline and Nassau Ponds are under the control of Associations, and all are excellently conducted. There are Ponds of other ponds in the outskirts of the city, where there is good skating, and which can be visited by the great public without tickets.

EFFECTS OF THE GOLD.—A colored man, named HENRY THOMAS, was found in Fulton-avenue on Saturday night, in an apparently perishing condition. He had evidently drunk too much liquor, and falling down, was nearly frozen to death. He was discovered by Officer GARDNER, who conveyed him to the Ninth Ward Station-house. His fingers were so much frozen that he will probably lose the use of them.... A woman named MARY R. DAVIS, who recently arrived in New-York from Cuba, was discovered lying on the sidewalk in Clinton, near Congress-street, on Saturday night last, having been prostrated by exhaustion and the effects of the cold. Miss DAVIS was stopping at the Gilsey House, New-York, and had come over to Brooklyn to search of some friends, lost her way, and finally dropped down from fatigue. She was attended to by Dr. GARDNER, No. 155 Clinton-street, and was subsequently sent to the City Hospital in a carriage by Sergeant MATTHEWS.

BLIGHT FIRE.—A fire broke out in the house of JAMES THACKAMBERRY, No. 3 Dennett-place, on Saturday afternoon, originating, as supposed, from the flue. The flames were extinguished before much damage was done.

A SUCCESSFUL TILL THIEF.—The saloon of GEORGE INGRAM, in Fifth-avenue, near Twenty-fifth-street, Gowanus, was entered by a thief on Saturday, during the temporary absence of the proprietor, and robbed of $60, which was taken from the till.

New-Jersey.

NEWARK COMMON COUNCIL.—The Newark Common Council held its regular monthly meeting on Friday evening. Propositions for increasing the salaries of a number of city officers were referred. The Commission to survey and lay out streets, were ordered to complete and file their maps by Dec. 31. The report of the Volunteer Aid Committee showed that relief had been extended during the month to the families of volunteers from thirteen New-Jersey Regiments, and twenty-eight from other States. The resignation of Alderman SEBASCOS, of the Second Ward, on account of ill health, was accepted, and a special election to fill the vacancy ordered for Tuesday, the 16th inst. Permission was granted to the Independent Telegraph Line to erect poles in certain streets. Centre Market Place was ordered to be sealed over. A monster petition, containing nearly two thousand names, was presented, in favor of reinstating the New-Jersey Freie Zeitung—(German Republican)—as a Corpor
